Citizens group recommends city candidates

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Citizens for a Better Manhattan decided which three candidates it will support in the election for City Commissioner.

The decision was based on interviews open to the public held at Manhattan Public Library at the end of January.

Jayme Morris-Hardeman, Jim Sherow and Tom Phillips were chosen for support by CBM.

CBM also is going to choose three school board candidates for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383. The interviews will be Thursday at Manhattan Public Library.

CBM is a group formed by Manhattan citizens this year to help those who they think are the best candidates elected to office.

Both Morris-Hardeman and Phillips agreed that protecting older neighborhoods is a key issue in the current race as well as the issue of micromanagement as a problem for the Manhattan City Commission.

Sherow is an assistant professor in history but was unavailable for comment.

"I've seen Jim at lots of local events and have a huge amount of respect for him," Morris-Hardeman said.

The candidates agreed on all six of the questions with the exception of Phillips on the question concerning wage requirements for businesses brought into Manhattan, Angela Hubler, co-chair of CBM, said.

Despite his disagreement with one of the questions used to determine eligibility, Hubler said she thinks he is still a good candidate.

Morris-Hardeman is currently the director of Sunflower CASA, a group of court-appointed special advocates for children who are in the court system because of abuse and neglect.

Morris-Hardeman was also the director of the steering committee for the Riley County Children, Youth and Families Planning Team for three years.

She said that addressing the issues of affordable housing, low wages and the need to support the existing social services of Manhattan are among her central goals if elected commissioner.

"I live in an older neighborhood," she said. "For the past four years we've been fighting to bring some stability to our neighborhoods."

Phillips served on the planning board under the City Commission and has been instrumental in the rezoning of the area surrounding campus.

The rezoning allowed students to live in the area closest to campus and single families to live in the areas outside of walking distance.

"At the time super-duplexes were being built in many areas downtown, outside of walking distance (of campus)," Phillips said. "Single families didn't know what they were living next to."

Jury selection begins for K-State professor's trial

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Murray is charged with murdering his ex-wife, Carmin Ross, in November 2003.

According to the Topeka Capital-Journal, 14 of the first 30 people called as prospective jury members have been removed from the list. Reasons given for removing members from the list of jurors ranged from job and school conflicts to personal situations that might sway a juror.

Two jurors were dismissed for the answers given on a juror questionnaire, according to the Capital-Journal. Three jurors were dismissed after admitting it would be difficult or very difficult to disregard the reports that they had seen or heard through the media.

By noon Monday, 17 people passed as potential jurors. Defense attorneys questioned the 17 on Monday afternoon, according to the Capital-Journal. To obtain a jury of 12 people and three alternates, defense and prosecution attorneys must pass a total of 45 people as suitable to be jurors.

At that point, the prosecution and defense will strike 15 people apiece to narrow the pool of 45 down to 12 jurors and three alternates.

The Lawrence Journal-World reported that the trial is expected to last four to six weeks.

Adviser helps with renovations

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Giving his time and effort to help out with a $3,000,000 house renovation is just a part of Todd Donavan's weekly routine.

Donavan, assistant marketing professor and Sigma Phi Epsilon adviser, won the organization adviser of the year award. Eleven other advisers were nominated.

"I've worked all through the fall and the winter to help out the house so that they have a better living facility," Donavan said.

As an adviser, Donavan finds many ways of helping out with the students in Sig Ep by motivating them and guiding them through their needs.

"I'm there to advise the executive board, to give them direction on manpower, leadership and proper activities," Donavan said. "I counsel the boys that get below a 2.5 GPA and come up with solutions to bump it up to a 3.0 or above. There's a steak dinner if they have it by the next semester."

Jim Franko, senior in marketing and member of Sig Ep, said he has learned a lot from Donavan and has found that he's a good leader.

"He's incredibly easy to work with, he's the kind of guy that helps you find the best solution and helps you find what the best course of action is to take," Franko said. "As opposed to telling you exactly what to do, he actually gives you direction."

Brian Coleman, senior in marketing and former Sig Ep president, said he admires the way Donavan handles things.

"He steps back and looks at stuff objectively," Coleman said. "The biggest thing I've learned from him is not being selfish and giving back, he's demonstrated that pretty well."

William Harlan, assistant coordinator of student activities and services, said Donavan has given money out of his own pocket to remodel the house and worked with the construction company to make sure everything ran smoothly.

"All of what he's done is pretty amazing, considering none of this is in his job description," Harlan said.

Among other things, Donavan also volunteers at Mosaic, an organization that helps the developmentally disabled. He also coaches Little Dribblers basketball and has gotten his family involved in Sig Ep.

"My wife even helps," Donavan said. "She helps me clean the house in the summer."

Franko said Donavan is the perfect example of a leader.

"An excellent leader demands work. He's not only an adviser with our house, he does all this other stuff and still has time for his family," Franko said. "He balances the different aspects of life."

Harlan said that good leaders are necessary in order for students to continue to excel in life.

"Every year we lose leaders of groups. It's so important that we have active advisers because they're usually here for a longer term," Harlan said. "This is why I think it's so important to recognize the advisers."

Donavan said the award, although flattering, was not the motivation for him to work hard.

"It's very much appreciated. I didn't do this because of the award, I did it because I'm passionate about helping these men," Donavan said. "I'm passionate about K-State."

Fire in Iranian mosque kills 59, injures 250; victims mostly women

By Nasser Karimi
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A fire raged through a crowded mosque in Tehran during evening prayers Monday after a female worshipper's veil caught the flames of a kerosene heater, killing at least 59 people and injuring more than 250.

The Arg Mosque was filled with about 400 worshippers, more crowded than usual because this is the Islamic month of Muharram, a holy period for Shiite Muslims.

Panicked people raced for the doors and smashed windows to escape the blaze, leaving burned shoes and women's black chadors scattered in the mosque yard. The mosque walls were charred, carpets were burned and religious books, including the Quran, were destroyed.

Women, who pray on the second floor of the mosque, separated from the men, had to race down stairs and through a narrow doorway to exit. Many stumbled and were trampled in the frenzied stampede to escape.

Hospital records checked by The Associated Press showed that 40 of those killed and the majority of the injured were women.

Tehran Police Chief Brig. Gen. Morteza Talaie was quoted by the Islamic Republic News Agency as saying 59 people were confirmed dead. More than 250 people were injured in the fire, according to rescue workers.

The fire started when the veil of a female worshipper caught the flames of a kerosene heater on the upper floor of the mosque. The flames spread to a thick green cloth that covered the ceiling and walls of the mosque in commemoration of the holy month.

Earlier reports had blamed a faulty electrical outlet, but IRNA reported that theory had been discarded. It also said officials had discounted the possibility of a bomb or arson attack.

"Pieces of burning cloth fell on the head of the worshippers, who stopped praying and smashed windows to run out of the mosque in panic," a witness said on condition of anonymity.

The injured, some of them in critical condition, were taken to nearby hospitals. Relatives gathered outside to await news of their loved ones.

Firefighters extinguished the fire an hour after it started, state television said.

Municipal workers clean the site of a fire at the Arg Mosque near the bazaar in central Tehran today. A blaze in a mosque in central Tehran killed 35 people on Monday, Iranian state television reported. "Thirty-five have been killed and 200 injured," said the television report, which blamed the fire on an electrical heater fault.

K-State alumnus to speak

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State alumnus Shanté Moore traveled a long way to visit his alma mater – all the way from Doha, Qatar.

Moore, economic and commercial attaché for the U.S. Embassy in Qatar, will speak on "Being a Leader in a Diverse World" at 7 tonight in the K-State Student Usnion's Forum Hall. The speech comes as a part of National Mortar Board Week, the senior honorary society Moore was a member of during his time as an K-State student.

Jan Wissman, adviser for Mortar Board, said Moore was selected by the organization's members to speak because his diverse background involves leadership and community service, including his two international service projects which took him to Paraguay and India.

"The Mortar Board chapter really wanted to invite someone who was a K-State alum, a young alum, who's had distinguished service," Wissman said. "I think he's experienced what it's like to be a leader and represent the United States and varied countries and cultures."

In addition to Moore's service projects, he won several scholarships his senior year, including the Truman and Fulbright scholarships.

After Moore's graduation in December 1996, he went to Paraguay in 1997 and 1998 for his Fulbright scholarship, working on civil military relations and how it involved the Paraguayan dictator regime. In 2000, Moore received his master's degree in foreign service from Georgetown University, followed by a fellowship with the U.S. Embassy in Paraguay for three months. Once he returned, Moore accepted an offer to join the foreign service.

"He's a good example of a student who practices leadership and service all the way through college," Wissman said. "That really positioned him for graduate school and then his position he holds now."

Despite his numerous community service projects and leadership opportunities, Moore said it was his initial trip to Paraguay that piqued his interest in international affairs. And it's the same international interest, in addition to leadership skills, that he hopes K-State students will take from his speech, he said.

"I think it's important that we as the U.S. understand the importance of being leaders in a diverse world," Moore said. "Part of being a good leader is understanding our world. Leadership and diversity are not mutually exclusive, but mutually inclusive."

Improvements made to ice rink

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Aly Kanning, junior in business, takes the skates off Rebkah Scholz, 6, after a skating session at the indoor ice rink in City Park. The ice rink offers parties, hockey and regular skating throughout the week.

Adam Dolezal, manager, said they added a chiller to the rink.

"We have a chiller this year, just like the professional ice rinks. Before, we had air conditioners," Dolezal said.

The chiller was worth it, he said.

The ice rink first opened in 1984. It cost $75,000 to build, Mike Buchanan, former manager, said. Most of the cost came from the units needed to cool and freeze the water.

"There is a system of tubes that lay down underneath the ice that are half an inch wide and run the length of the ice. When you pump a certain solution through the tubing, it makes the tubes cool and when you pour water on it, it freezes the water," Buchanan said.

Buchanan said he worked in the Parks and Recreation Department when the decision was made to open the rink.

Both Dolezal and Buchanan said the reason for building was so the community could have a reliable ice rink.

"They used to fill a ditch in front of Johnny Caw (a statue in City Park) and the firemen would spray water in there and let it freeze and that's where the kids would skate," Dolezal said.

"It was never very reliable because it was dependent on the temperature. So they came up with the idea for a rink that wasn't dependent on the temperature," Buchanan said.

When the rink opened, the clientele was a mixture of younger kids from the community and college students, Buchanan said.

Although the primary customers today are middle school students and families, there are a few college students who skate, said Heather Fuertes, Manhattan Ice Rink employee and freshman in marketing.

Now there are advertisements in both the Collegian and the Manhattan Mercury, as well as brochures around town and advertisements on the local cable channels.

Aly Kanning, junior in human resource management, said she heard about through her sorority's e-mail list.

"It was Kappa Delta siblings' day and it went through our list-serv that that was one of the things that we could do was take our girls down to ice skate," she said.

Kanning visited the rink for the first time Saturday. She said she enjoyed it.

"It wasn't too crowded and it was a good environment to take little kids to and hang out, and we knew that they weren't going to get hit or anything," Kanning said.

Debate to address affirmative action

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

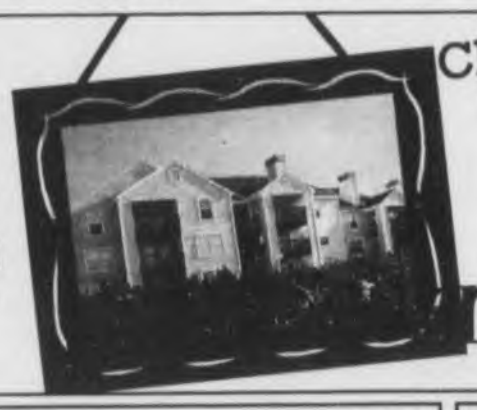
George Curry will facilitate a debate about affirmative action in the K-State Student Union.

This debate is part of the many activities that the Black Student Union is sponsoring for Black History Month. The debate is co-sponsored by the Diversity Programming Council.

Curry is the editor in chief of the National Newspaper Publishers Association News Service and BlackPressUSA.com. As the facilitator of the debate, he will present both sides of the affirmative action debate, discussing whether it is a good or bad thing, Kendra Spencer, BSU president, said.

After presenting both sides of the debate, Curry will reveal what his opinion is, Spencer said.

Affirmative action is something that needs to be addressed in schools, she said.



"I know a lot of students don't believe in affirmative action because they think it is just reverse racism," Spencer said.

However, it is essential that affirmative action is implemented in schools, Spencer said.

"I hope the students address the issues of why affirmative action is necessary on college campuses throughout the nation," she said. "I hope it enlightens them on some of the things that do go on that makes affirmative action necessary."

TO THE POINT

U.S. cannot continue to act alone in war

With Bush's request for more funding for the Iraq and Afghanistan wars, as well as other overseas aid missions, the amount spent on war could reach more than $300 billion.

With increasing federal debt, this legislation should be considered carefully.

The U.S. now has a responsibility to finish the job it started and rebuild a broken nation.

However, if the U.S. cannot conduct future foreign relations as it did with this war in Iraq.

Other nations as well as the United Nations were cast aside when they didn't bow down and submit to U.S. requests and justification for war.

Bush might not have to be spending billions of dollars if the world backed the actions.

With support comes dollars, lifting the financial burden off our shoulders.

We've been hearing over and over again that the money is going to train Iraqi troops but the death toll continues to rise.

Congressmen should analyze the budget requests and only approve them if all available resources are being utilized and previous war funds have been used appropriately.

We can't afford to continue acting alone in the world. Not only has the death toll risen too high, but the financial burden is unbearable.

Rediscovering tradition

Religious observations like Lent are more than just routine, obligation

The definition of irony: getting my braces taken off last Tuesday, then giving up meat for Lent.

JESSE MANNING

Last Wednesday I joined many of my fellow Catholics at Mass and sported a nifty ash cross on my forehead for the rest of the day. We all got funny looks afterwards. We got interrogated: "What is that on your head?" or "You don't even know what the meaning of Lent is, do you?"

Whatever – of course I do. Ash Wednesday is a somber time in which we mourn the passing of Mardi Gras and prepare for the grueling 40-day march toward Easter. Plus, in order to retain a shred of the piety of ancient Christians, we give up something that we vaguely appreciate but have no trouble living without, like Pepsi, wearing socks or air freshener in the bathroom.

And because of that, we suffer. Oh man, how we suffer.

The entire Lenten season is like a New Year's resolution that we're religiously obligated to stick to because, you know, God likes us better if we haven't eaten chocolate in the 40 days before Easter. The deprivation fiesta isn't just limited to Catholics; many Protestants join in, making the entire pre-Easter season one big piety-measuring contest (which, by the way, I win).

For the next several weeks, sacrifice is in vogue. Larissa Noonan, a Disciple of Christ and senior in animal science, gave up cussing, soda and sweets. Lindsay MacAdam, Methodist and senior in public relations, gave up candy and soda so that she'd be reminded "of the sacrifices that Jesus made."

Only a few hours into Lent, I noticed that MacAdam was sucking on a Jolly Rancher. "Oh damn," she said. "I totally forgot already." To be fair, I don't know that even Christ Himself could have turned down a Jolly Rancher.

But looking past the ash-covered foreheads and the crazy sacrifices, you can find a real meaning in Lent – a meaning that is lost on so many Christians. It's not about being the most pious on the block, kneeling a little lower than everyone else and making the sign of the cross so many times that a repetitive motion injury develops.

There are important meanings behind Christian traditions. Unfortunately, those meanings are sometimes skewed or lost altogether when generation after generation of Christians simply accept customs and dogma without bothering to find out why.

There are over two billion Christians in the world today, but nominalism is rampant. In my own four-bedroom apartment, 100 percent of the tenants are Christian, but only 25 percent is practicing – hey, look at me. I'm a statistic. Even practicing Christians are sometimes clueless as to why they follow certain customs. It's nothing to be ashamed of, just something that needs to be addressed.

Sorry, but you can't escape this week's column without some chastising and admonishment. Here's my suggestion for a Lenten penance that can be followed by Christians everywhere: rediscover your faith.

Whatever denomination or following you belong to, ask questions and dig a little deeper into your own religion. We get nothing out of our faiths if we just go through the motions.

For many of you, that work involves getting up early on Sunday mornings, which is admittedly hard to do.

Coincidentally, I haven't heard of anyone giving up alcohol for Lent. Now that would be a real sacrifice.

Constantly changing passwords causes frustration

It's that time of year again.

It's time for everyone to change their eID password, or else be subject to public execution by the friendly geeks – and I mean that in the best way possible – in front of a row of computers in Hale Library.

SCOTT SEEL

According to the Information Technology and Assistance Center's eID Web site, this measure began in 1999 when a large number of people, presumably all from Marlatt Hall, were naughty and broke into people's information.

Protecting our computers is a noble goal.

But here's the problem: it's easier to get into Yale Law than it is to change your password in this system.

Sure, changing it every semester is a hassle, but it's one I can tolerate. What I can't tolerate is having to randomly generate a sequence of eight alpha-numeric characters to create a password.

Let's say I wanted to make my password "kjjp00," a seven-digit password that I just made up on the spot.

Nope.

Sorry, this password violates Rule Four in the Seven Commandments of eID Passwords: "Passwords must contain at least five different characters."

You see, were I to make this my password, seven residents of Marlatt Hall would have cracked it within 23 seconds.

Sure, people shouldn't be allowed to make their password "AAAAAAAA," but such a password can be prevented without other strict requirements that only serve to complicate the lives of students.

Another one of these commandments has me scratching my head.

Commandment #3: "Passwords can only be eight characters long."

Perhaps I'm missing something, but it seems to me that allowing longer passwords would increase security.

Illustrations by Jesse Manning | COLLEGIAN

I have several computer-savvy friends who typically use passwords upwards of 10 characters in length and they are forced to lower their security standards just so people can't check their e-mail.

In fact, a lot of experts are starting to suggest not using passwords at all, instead going to longer, more complex phrases and sentences to make it more difficult for computer programs to "guess" the password.

However, in all honesty, I think this restriction is only in there so you can't make your password "ITAC-SUCKS."

Unfortunately, it doesn't end here.

Now, at first glance, this makes at least some sense. If a password was a word, it might be easier to guess. But the problem is, even if you just make something up and it's close to a word, you're out of luck.

My friend Cory, who has forgotten more about computers than I will ever know, had problems with this one.

Cory laments trying to create a new password and being told it was too close to a word. Upon investigation, he could find no word in the English language which resembled his password choice.

In essence – as much of an annoyance as it is – I understand the importance of changing passwords regularly, but it shouldn't take 45 minutes to come up with a password "random" enough to satisfy God's – or in this case, ITAC's – wishes.

I guess it all comes full circle though. You see, the people at ITAC get punished for their sins when they have to deal with all the people who have forgotten what they changed their password to. It seems that, in addition to making it hard for hackers to get your password right, it also makes it impossible to remember.

Mock interviews, résumé workshops offered

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Interviewing for a new job can be a frightening process.

Career and Employment Services has offered mock interviews for years to ease students' nerves, but three weeks ago, CES started a videotape mock interview process, Jennifer Brantley, assistant director of CES, said.

Like other mock interviews, the interviewee arrives, the interview is conducted and the interview is critiqued, Brantley said. But with the videotape interview, the interview is done in front of a camera and the session is reviewed and critiqued with the interviewee, she said.

"We go through the interview process with students on all levels," Brantley said. "We give critiques, like in the regular mock interviews, but this way we can show them what went wrong or what was good. We can offer suggestions with eye contact, handshakes, appearance, pretty much everything we can."

Students should take advantage of what the CES offers, whether they are sophomores thinking ahead or seniors realizing that job interviews are just around the corner, Brantley said.

The video process is a win-win situation for the interviewer and the interviewee, Jessica Wolff, graduate assistant, said.

"It's good for students, because you can tell people several times that they don't have good eye contact, but they don't quite understand," Wolff, graduate student in speech, said. "But once you can show them, they will realize it and go, 'Oh, I do do that.'

"I think it helps to show where people may be weak in an interview so they can work on it."

As an interviewer, Brantley said it helps her point out examples she wants to emphasize.

"I take notes, just like in regular mock interviews," Brantley said. "And there might be something that I wrote down, but can't quite recall when, where or how it happened. When we play it back, I can point it out and say, 'Yeah, this is where I found your answer unclear.'"

Subhajit Mondal, graduate student in computer science, said he found the experience very helpful.

"I've never seen myself on videotape, so watching myself getting interviewed was an enriching experience," Mondal said. "I've never been interviewed for a job in America before. I was scared, and after this interview got over, the fears I had were gone."

Mondal said his fear of being interviewed came from the idea that interviewers prospective workers are mean and picky.

He said everyone should take advantage of what CES has to offer.

"I think everyone who hasn't been interviewed should try it," Mondal said. "It helps seeing your reactions when you review it.

"They also offer very good tips over there. Even if you don't sign up for interviews, you should at least look through some of the manuals they have there."

Air Force sponsors computer simulations, trial runs

By Dane Lickteig
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Air Force, Navy and the Federal Aviation Administration have all shown interest in the research being done by James Shanteau, professor of psychology, and his project team.

This research, known as the Cochran-Weiss-Shanteau Index of Performance project, has been going for seven years and is currently sponsored by the scientific branch of the Air Force. The objective is the assessment of judgmental performance when correct answers are unknown. The project has been successful in a variety of contexts, including research in auditing, livestock judging, personnel selection and high- and low-fidelity simulations of air traffic control.

The air traffic control part is where the team finds itself today. The project team recruits students and then assesses their behavior and performance within the team. The participants are trained to do trial runs and then are put in teams to perform.

"The participants seem to be enjoying themselves," Shanteau said. "All that we ask of them to do is arrive at their scheduled time and perform their tasks to the best of their abilities."

From the participants' perspective, they are assigned to teams to which they belong for a semester. During the semester, they arrive as a team, perform its tasks within the computer simulations and then complete the scales measuring psychological variables, Chris Bartlett, graduate research assistant, said.

Each participant is assigned to a sector of airspace. The participants guide the aircrafts through their sectors and hand them off to the adjacent controllers. They work as a team to ensure the aircraft follows a route to their destinations while maintaining safe separation.

While at times the research might seem tedious or difficult, the overall feelings about the research are positive.

"In general, any project will be difficult at times, tedious at times and enjoyable," Bartlett said.

"With that said, I find this project to be very enjoyable, even though some aspects of it are extremely challenging and require much attention to detail."

"It all goes together, the good and the bad," Shanteau said.

K-State baseball returns home from Phoenix winless

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State traveled to Phoenix, Ariz., last Thursday looking to get its season started on the right note, but instead they came home with an 0-2 record.

The Wildcats began the season on Thursday when they faced Northwestern.

K-State took a 1-0 lead in the third when junior Eric Eymann, who went 2-4 on the night, led off with a bunt down the third base line. Junior David Baker sacrificed him to second, followed by a single by senior Marc Chabot that drove Eymann home.

However, the lead didn't last long.

Senior pitcher Eric Rollins gave up a four run fourth inning, which was the difference on a cold rainy night in Phoenix. Rollins dropped to 0-1 on the season. Northwestern's Evan Blessoff picked up the win after scattering one run on five hits over five innings.

"We can't give up the big inning to teams," Coach Brad Hill said. "Our offense just didn't come through for us. It's a learning process and this is a long season.

Mother Nature kept the Wildcats from getting back on track after the opening loss, as Friday and Saturday games against Portland and Oregon State were rained out and have yet to be rescheduled.

"It's frustrating to have games rained out this early in the season, but we just have to deal with the adversity and come out with enthusiasm when they tell us we can play," Hill said.

Sunday's game against Portland was moved across Phoenix to the Kansas City Royals' spring training facility in Surprise, Ariz.

"I was swinging the bat pretty well," Blunt said. "I just wish I could have done a little bit

Losing streak rages on for men's basketball team

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The pressure is on the K-State men's basketball team – and it's not just onlookers who feel the Wildcats need to turn it around after losing four straight games.

Following K-State's 75-72 overtime loss at Texas on Saturday, sophomore guard Fred Peete said the Wildcats have to be perfect as they finish out the Big 12 Conference season.

"We can't lose any more games," Peete said. "We've got to go win every game. We just can't make any more mistakes. There's no time for errors now."

That quest for perfection begins tonight as K-State travels to Ames, Iowa, to take on Iowa State (13-8, 5-5) at 7 tonight.

Once owning a 3-3 conference record, the Wildcats (13-8, 3-7) have been winless so far in February.

Peete scored a career-high 28 points, grabbed five rebounds and had two steals in the game.

The junior college transfer also became the first Wildcat to hit seven three-point field goals since Gilson DeJesus hit seven in 2002.

The performance followed a 20-point effort and six 3-pointers in a loss to Kansas last Wednesday, and Peete earned Big 12 Rookie of the Week honors for his play.

However, as good as Peete was in helping the Wildcats take the game into overtime, it was not enough to completely overcome another poor first half for K-State.

Game time

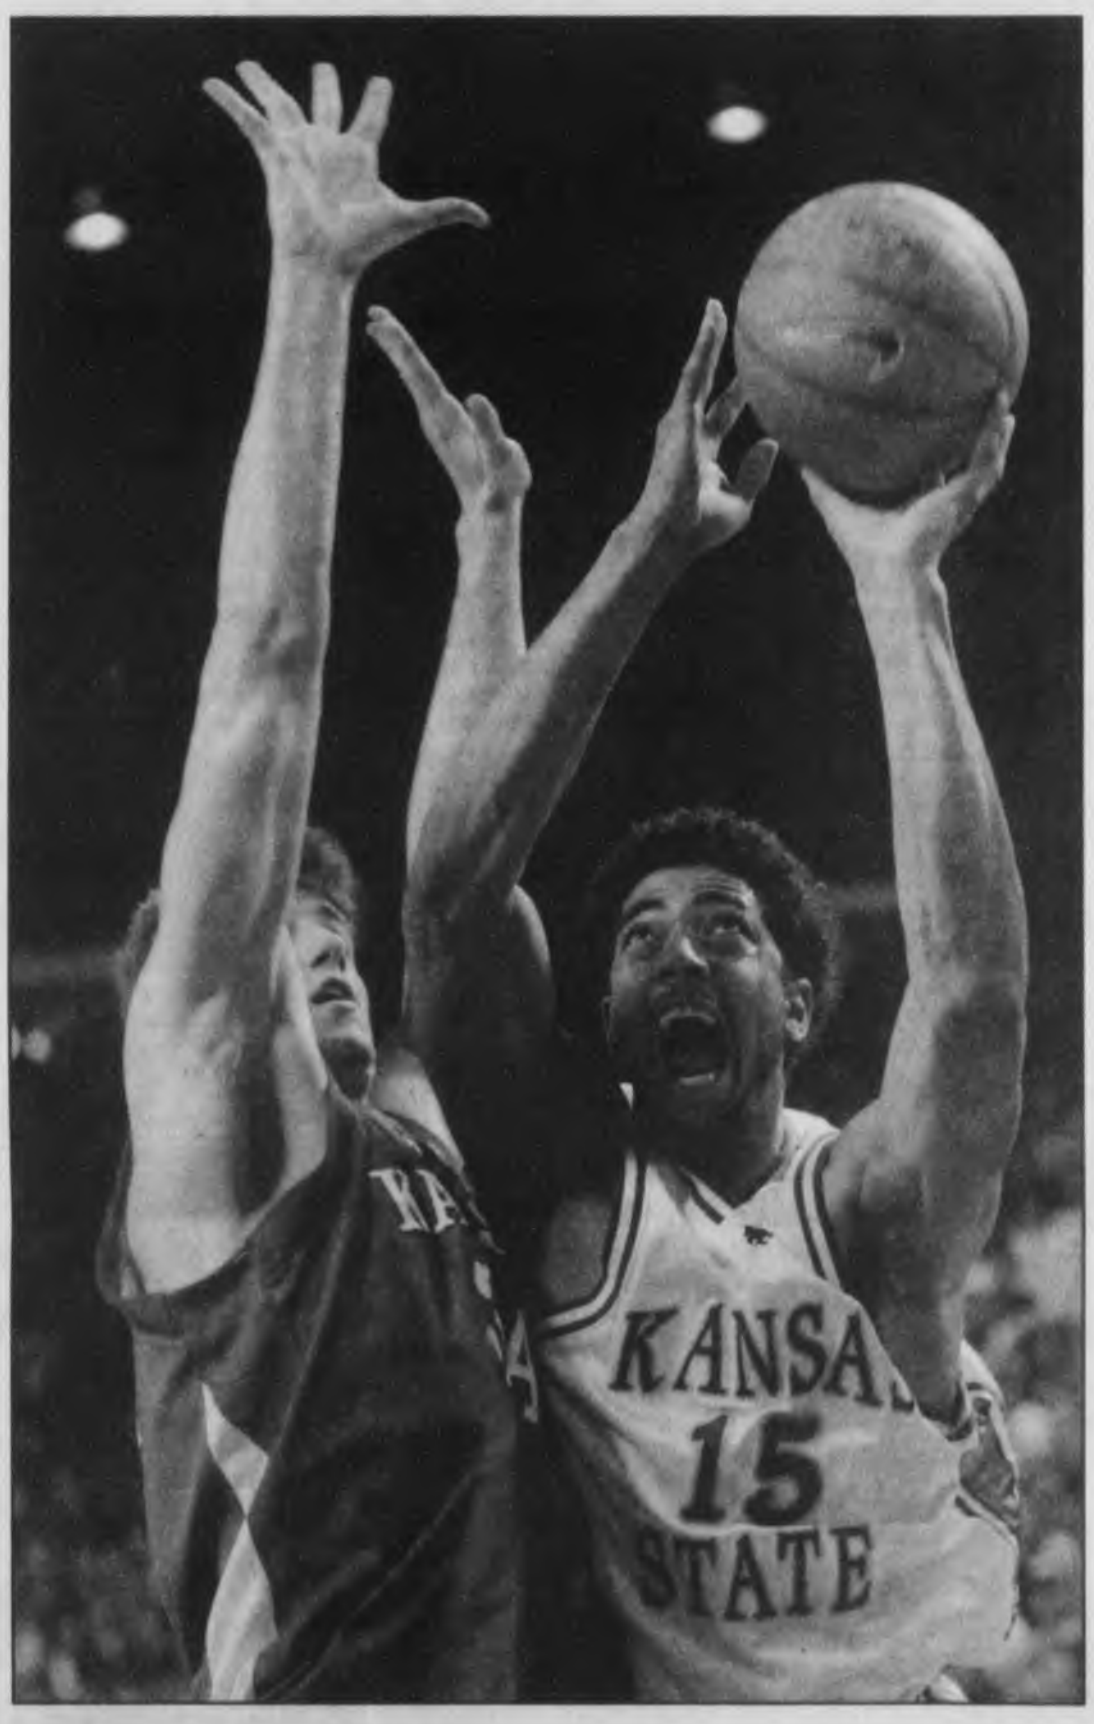
When: 7 tonight
Where: Hilton Coliseum; Ames, Iowa
Television/Radio: Fox Sports Midwest (Ch. 34)Mid America Sports Network

The halftime total was the team's lowest of the season, as K-State shot 29 percent from the field in the first half.

Peete said though the team played better in the second half, the performance before halftime probably cost the Wildcats the game.

"We found ourselves in another slump that probably ended up getting us the 'L'," Peete said.

"We ended up shooting 29 percent in the first half, and in the second half, we shot the ball very well, they just capitalized off of some of our mistakes," he said.



A better start could be crucial tonight, as the Wildcats will play a Cyclone team that is as hot as anybody in the Big 12.

After starting the conference season 0-5, Iowa State has won its last five games.

The Cyclones' 81-68 win over No. 25 Texas Tech was the team's fourth victory over a top 25 team.

Wooldridge said his team still had confidence despite recent hard times and will be successful if the Wildcats can play well in all phases of the game.

"Well, they've been a good group, and they still believe they're capable of winning ball games," Wooldridge said. "They've been resilient from the get-go and, again, we've got to be balanced. There's got to be a lot of balance on that floor. Defense, offense, rebounding, free throw shooting. I mean we can't have a phase of the game where we don't play well and expect to win."

Columnist shares his thoughts, observations from the road

MICHAEL ASHFORD

Over the weekend, I drove 1,430 miles, traveled through three states and watched two gut-wrenching basketball games by my Wildcats.

Another writer and I made the trip to Austin, Texas, for the men's game against Texas on Saturday and we hit up Norman, Okla., for the women's game against the Sooners on Sunday.

Needless to say, that's a long way to drive for two losses, both of equally huge importance.

On the drive back, many thoughts went through my head, and I figured I'd share them with you today.

1. OH, WHAT COULD HAVE BEEN

I really hate to bring this up, especially with games still left on the schedule, but just think of how different this season could have been for the Wildcat men.

The Wildcats are a free throw, a buzzer-beater and an overtime away from a 6-4 record in the Big 12 Conference.

In losses to Nebraska, Texas Tech and Texas, K-State has come so close to winning, but has fallen just short.

The loss to the Longhorns this weekend was the latest game in which the Wildcats proved to be a worthy opponent, but couldn't quite break through with the win.

If the ball bounced a little differently this season, we would be talking about a possible "Big Dance" appearance. Instead, all we can hope for is an NIT berth.

2. FRED PEETE

Fred Peete put on one of the greatest performances by a Wildcat in a long time, as he scored 28 points, grabbed five rebounds, picked away two steals and had just one turnover.

He connected on 7-of-14 3-pointers, the second game in a row he has made at least six.

Even Texas fans appreciated the effort.

After the game, Peete was showered with cheers and praise from the Texas fans, who all knew they had just witnessed a truly awesome game by one of the Big 12's brightest young stars.

3. THEN THERE'S WECKER

As for the K-State women's 77-61 loss to the Sooners, that was a hard one to stomach.

The Wildcats needed a win to keep pace with with league-leader Baylor for the Big 12 Championship, but instead, they came out flat on defense and surrendered nine 3-pointers to a Sooner team that had lost four of its last five games.

However, if there was any doubt that senior forward Kendra Wecker is the best player in the conference – if not the nation – she erased every one of those doubts on Sunday.

Wecker scored 29 points, the most she has ever scored in a Big 12 Conference game.

Wecker has put this team on her back this season and has taken the Wildcats a long way, but someone needs, no, must step up to take some of the pressure off of Wecker.

A team performance like the one on Sunday will send the Wildcats home early in the NCAA Tournament again.

If someone does step up – i.e. Megan Mahoney, Claire Coggins or Laurie Koehn this team could go further than any other K-State team.

4. OKLAHOMA RADIO

On a humorous note: what is it with Oklahoma radio?

I think there is an unwritten law that every disc jockey in the state must talk as if he were announcing a professional wrestling match.

One of my favorite lines came from a disc jockey on an Oklahoma City station, 96.9 "Bob FM," who was promoting a monster truck rally – I kid you not.

He blessed us with this beauty: "You can pay for the entire seat, but you're only going to need the edge, 'cause we're gonna rock."

Needless to say, it was the highlight of our drive through Oklahoma, which has to be one of the most boring states in all the United States.

CBB | Peete named Big 12 Rookie of the Week

The Big 12 Conference named K-State sophomore guard Fred Peete the Big 12 Rookie of the Week on Monday.

Peete

In games last week against No. 3 Kansas and No. 23 Texas, Peete averaged 24 points on 51.7 percent shooting. Peete also hit 13-of-23 three-point shots, including seven against Texas.

His seven three-pointers tied him for most this season by a Big 12 player.

He scored 20 points against the Jayhawks and 28 points against the Longhorns, making it the second time in his career he has had back-to-back 20-point games.

This is the second time this season Peete has earned the honor.

MLB | Santana agrees to four-year deal with Twins

Santana

The 25-year-old left-hander, who had been scheduled for a salary arbitration hearing Tuesday, led the league with a 2.61 ERA and 265 strikeouts last season. He become the first Venezuelan to win the Cy Young and the first unanimous winner in the AL since Pedro Martinez in 2000.

He set a Twins record by winning 13 consecutive games and didn't lose in 15 starts after the All-Star break, going 13-0 with a 1.21 ERA to help Minnesota win its third straight AL Central division title.

NFL | Cleveland Browns release QB Garcia

Garcia

Garcia signed a four-year, $25 million free agent contract with the Browns last March after spending five seasons with the San Francisco 49ers. But almost from the time Garcia arrived in Cleveland, there were problems.

During the exhibition season, the 34-year-old complained he wasn't getting enough playing time and that he was having trouble adjusting to new teammates and a new offense. Garcia made things worse by openly criticizing former Browns coach Butch Davis and offensive coordinator Terry Robiskie, complaining that they weren't using him properly.

Movie review by Marcus Hernandez

"Elektra" tells the story of Elektra Natchios (Jennifer Garner). You may remember her from 2003's "Daredevil," in which she shared an ill-fated love with blind crime fighter Daredevil before being murdered by evil assassin Bullseye. "Elektra" is predicated on that death.

In this film, Elektra has been brought back from the dead by the mysterious and blind martial arts master named Stick (Terence Stamp) who trained her as a child. Elektra is now a hired assassin and at the film's open, she has taken a job that requires her to live on a small Pacific Northwest island before she is given her targets.

She befriends her neighbors Mark Miller (Goran Visnjic) and his 13-year-old daughter Abby but then discovers that the father and daughter are the people she has been hired to kill. She makes an attempt at the job but can't do it and instead takes up the task of protecting Mark and Abby.

Fast facts

Elektra

- Elektra will be released on video and DVD on April 5, 2005.
- It is rated PG-13 and runs for 97 minutes.
- Jennifer Garner, Goran Visnjic and Terence Stamp star in the film.
- The film is directed by Rob Bowman.

The people who want them dead are called the Order of the Hand. The Hand is looking for a person called the Treasure who will unbalance the scales of good and evil. This war has been waged for thousands of years between the Hand and the group operated by Stick. The Hand employs a group of supernatural assassins like Stone, who has skin as tough as, surprise!, stone, and Typhoid, who can suck the life energy out of living things like people and plants.

"Elektra" is directed by Rob Bowman, who seems to have developed some kind of nervous tic as the film is edited at a frenetic pace. This editing makes the fight scenes muddled. The film's pacing is too ponderous and we are treated to too many flashbacks that establish Elektra's strict childhood training by her father and later by Stick.

Garner does what she can with the material that she is given. She broods and grumps her way through much of the film. The other characters are not developed enough for us to care much about them.

Overall, this film is a mess. There are not enough good fight scenes or any Marvel Comics mythology to satisfy the superhero crowd and not enough romance between Elektra and Mark to satisfy anyone looking for that sort of thing. "Elektra" is definitely not worth renting.

The Go! Team brings energetic debut, live tracks

"The Go! Team"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

It is incredibly difficult to pick a favorite song on The Go! Team's debut "Thunder, Lightning, Strike" because the whole album is so damn good. The album bristles with a spontaneity and sense of fun that few albums I have heard can claim.

The Go! Team is a kitchen sink band that has created the party album of party albums. Similar in spirit to The Avalanches and rJd2, The Go! Team brings together genres ranging from sunshine funk and hip-hop to 1980s cop drama theme songs ala "The A-Team." The main difference with The Go! Team and similar artists is the British band's use of live instrumentation.

The opening song, "Panther Dash," begins with an electronic drone followed by drum clicks that lead into a joyous "Hawaii 5-0"-esque guitar solo. A boisterous harmonica solo overtakes the guitar one minute into the song.

"Ladyflash" pays homage to 1960s girl groups with an intermixing of hip-hop. The song is complete with cheerleader-like chants and is complemented with the female rapper Ninja. An excellent flute solo floats in and out of the vocals and the dual drum kits.

The third track, "Feelgood By Numbers," has a rollicking piano solo that brings to mind Schroeder belting out the perfect song to which Snoopy can dance.

The song, "Get It Together," opens with a pounding drum kit and excited guitar line before a recorder solo is suddenly shoved down the listener's throat. It is exciting to think that those plastic instruments have a better use than torturing the ears of third-grade parents. The best part of the song is the record-scratching breakdown that leads into cheerleader chants and finishes out the song.

"Junior Kickstart" is the perfect theme song for B.A. Baracas to pound some skulls. The song has a blissful trumpet line competing with an unbelievable harmonica solo to be the loudest instrument present.

"Bottle Rocket" brings back the joy of waking up on Saturday mornings when worthwhile cartoons were on TV, each theme song implanted in our tiny heads. "Bottle Rocket" features ninja raps over the funkiest track Ike and Tina Turner never recorded, backed by Jackson 5-like vocals.

"Friendship Update" is the theme song I want playing behind me everywhere I walk. It has a joyous piano and keyboard intertwined with strings, horns and guitar.

"Huddle Formation" brings back the cheerleader vocals and harmonica solo to create the best pep rally song ever.

Courtesy art

The amazing thing about "Thunder, Lightning, Strike" is how it manages to keep up the energy built in the beginning of the album through the last tracks.

The final track, "Everyone's a VIP to Someone," is a heartfelt funk song complete with banjo solo. The harmonica solo and swelling strings recall the theme from "Moon River." The track reintroduces all of the instruments heard in the album and it is an excellent way to end this perfect album.

What is most amazing about The Go! Team is the energy and utter reckless abandon with which the members play their instruments and the amazing ends that are created by these means. Without a doubt, The Go! Team has earned the right to use an exclamation point in its name.

Thomas Jackson, marketing and development officer of McCain, said that this show is one of the highlights of the spring season. He said that this is a unique show because it is doing a national tour while it is still on Broadway.

Bush's latest budget request for wars pushes total past $300 billion

By Alan Fram
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

President Bush asked Congress on Monday to provide $81.9 billion more for wars in Iraq and Afghanistan and for other U.S. efforts overseas, pushing the total price tag for the conflicts and the anti-terror fight past $300 billion.

Republicans hope to push the package through Congress by early spring, reflecting both parties' desire to finance U.S. troops in the field and give Iraqis more responsibility following their national elections. Bush asked lawmakers to pay for the new spending by borrowing the money – which will make huge federal deficits even larger.

"The majority of this request will ensure that our troops continue to get what they need to protect themselves and complete their mission," Bush said in a statement accompanying his request.

He also said the money would help continue the pursuit of terrorists and help the United States "seize the opportunity to build peace and democracy in the Middle East."

The bulk of the package – $74.9 billion – was for the Defense Department, ranging from the direct costs of fighting and replacing damaged equipment to training Iraqi and Afghan forces.

There was also aid for U.S. allies like Pakistan and Ukraine, money to build a new embassy in Baghdad, assistance for tsunami-damaged Indian Ocean countries and help for victims of war in Sudan.

Rep. Jerry Lewis, R-Calif., chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said he would move the bill "quickly and cleanly through the Congress" with a goal of sending Bush the legislation by early April.

Rep. John Spratt of South Carolina, top Democrat on the House Budget Committee, said lawmakers would back the effort to help American forces. But he complained that the measure contained some items – such as $5 billion to help restructure Army combat units to make them more flexible – that seemed to have little to do with the war and should have been in Bush's overall budget released last week.

"This is one way of trying to keep the regular budget sum down," he said.

Congress provided Bush with a $25 billion down payment last summer for this year's costs of the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Before Monday's request, Congress had already approved $201.2 billion for the Defense Department since the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, for the two wars and its other efforts to tighten security and to hunt terrorists, according to a tally by the Congressional Research Service.

In addition, lawmakers had provided nearly $27 billion for rebuilding Iraq and Afghanistan, said the service, which compiles reports for Congress.

Car bomb kills former Lebanese leader

By Bassem Mroue
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

AN NAHAR | SIPA

Lebanon's former prime minister Rafik Hariri, a political veteran who resigned four months ago after falling out with Syria, was killed in a massive bomb blast in central Beirut Monday. Another nine people were killed and about 100 wounded when the explosion ripped through Hariri's motorcade, leaving a trail of devastation in a busy seafront area in scenes reminiscent of the Lebanese civil war.

A massive bomb. A huge crater. Cars ablaze. And an assassinated leader. Bloody images from the past played out once again in the streets of Beirut.

The killing of former Prime Minister Rafik Hariri revived fears that this country – flourishing after 15 years of civil war – might plunge anew into a period of political violence.

The blast that killed Hariri and nine others came, ironically, in the very downtown district he helped to rebuild. Just blocks from the blast site and its deep crater, tourists have returned in recent years to gather at sidewalk cafes under buildings rebuilt in warm yellow stone.

Yet the blast Monday and the setback it represents do not mean civil war, not as it was between 1975 and 1990, when religious and sectarian groups fought bitterly.

Instead, the political debate over Syria's influence that turned ugly on Monday cuts across religious lines. And Hariri, a Sunni Muslim, had many allies in the Christian camp.

Still, the smoldering wreckage and 30-foot crater on a boulevard near the Mediterranean Sea were scenes the Lebanese hoped they would never see again.

The United States called the attack "a terrible reminder" that Lebanon still must shake free of occupation by Syria – the neighbor that keeps 15,000 troops there and influences virtually all key political decisions.

Syria denied any role and condemned the assassination. But opposition leaders in Lebanon said they held both the Lebanese and Syrian governments responsible and demanded that Syrian troops withdraw.

A U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said it was too early to know who was responsible, but said any list of suspects "would have to include the Syrians and their surrogates in Lebanon."

Hariri, 60, left office in October but had the wealth and the prominence to maintain some degree of independence from Syria, while never moving toward total defiance.

Results in for Iraqi elections

By Jamie Tarabay
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A French-educated finance minister and a former London physician emerged Monday as the top candidates to be Iraq's next prime minister, as leaders of the clergy-backed Shiite Muslim alliance launched consultations after failing to get a two-thirds majority in the vote for Iraq's new parliament.

The prominence of urbane, moderate, Western-oriented figures appears designed to counter concern in Washington that Iran's influence will grow in Iraq after a Shiite-dominated government takes power – even though the ultimate decision may rest with a reclusive elderly cleric.

Adel Abdul-Mahdi, the interim finance minister, and Ibrahim al-Jaafari, the interim vice president, were said to be the leading candidates for prime minister.

The Kurds, who are poised to become kingmakers in the new Iraq, have already said they want Jalal Talabani, a secular Sunni Kurd and leader of the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, to be Iraq's next president. The Shiites may seek a deal with the Kurds to back Talabani for president in return for Kurdish support for the Shiites prime ministerial choice.

The Kurds, who comprise about 15 percent of Iraq's population, have demanded the new constitution legalize Kurdish self-rule in the north. They also want an end to what they call "Arabization" of Kirkuk and other northern areas where most of the Arabs are Sunni Muslims.

But the Shiites also know they must move carefully, particularly if they want to extend a hand to the minority Sunni Arabs to form an inclusive government and tame a virulent insurgency. Many Sunni Arabs, who make up about 20 percent of the population, stayed home on election day, either out of fear of violence or to support a boycott call by radical clerics opposed to the U.S. military.

Roadside bombs on Monday killed a U.S. soldier and three Iraqi National Guard troops, and officials said insurgents blew up an oil pipeline near Kirkuk and killed two senior police officers in Baghdad.

Three other American soldiers were wounded when the bomb detonated near their patrol outside the town of Baqouba, 35 miles northeast of Baghdad, the military said.

At least 1,461 members of the U.S. military have died since the beginning of the Iraq war in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count.

The Jan. 30 election results for the National Assembly, announced Sunday, gave the clergy-backed United Iraqi Alliance 48 percent of the vote, the Kurdish alliance 26 percent, and the ticket led by interim Prime Minister Ayad Allawi, a secular Shiite who supported strong ties to Washington, only 14 percent.

Backroom trading for the top posts in the new government began in earnest Monday after the United Iraqi Alliance failed to secure the two-thirds majority in the newly elected assembly that would have allowed it to control the legislature and install whomever it wanted as president.

The National Assembly's first task is to elect a president and two vice presidents by a two-thirds majority. The three then choose a new prime minister subject to assembly approval.

The parties that make up the alliance – the Islamic Dawa Party, the Supreme Council for the Islamic Revolution in Iraq and former Pentagon protege Ahmad Chalabi's Iraqi National Congress – huddled for talks to decide on a prime ministerial candidate.

Al-Jaafari was the Dawa Party's choice, while SCIRI nominated Abdul-Mahdi, said Humam Hamoudi, a spokesman for the United Iraqi Alliance. He said the alliance would decide on Tuesday.

U.N. says Egypt did not make nuclear weapons

By George Jahn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Egypt's nuclear experiments do not appear part of an attempt to make weapons, the U.N. atomic monitoring agency said Monday, praising Cairo's cooperation with an investigation of the country's activities.

The report, compiled by the International Atomic Energy Agency, made clear that investigations will continue into the atomic research that stretched back four decades and ended as recently as five years ago.

The summary, released to diplomats accredited to the agency and leaked to The Associated Press, went some way in dispelling concerns that Egypt had explored developing nuclear arms.

The Vienna-based agency suggested that it has not found anything so far to challenge Cairo's assertions that its activities did not go beyond the laboratory and did not include enriching uranium or separating plutonium – two processes used to make the fissile core of nuclear arms.

4 state pageants dropped by Miss America; Illinois files suit

By John Curran
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Already scrambling to find a new TV network, the Miss America pageant is engaged in a squabble after pulling the franchises of four state pageant operators, one of whom is fighting back in court.

The Miss Illinois Scholarship Pageant persuaded a judge last week to bar the Miss America Organization from letting a new group take over the Miss Illinois pageant, pending resolution of a federal lawsuit challenging the legality of it.

The operators of state pageants in Colorado, Indiana and Montana were also ousted by the Atlantic City-based national organization, which refused to renew their franchises after they expired Nov. 15.

Miss America Organization CEO Arthur McMaster would not say Monday why the franchises were pulled. He said it was a decision of the organization's franchise committee.

"There was no reason given. The contracts expired and the franchise committee decided not to renew the franchises," McMaster said.

The franchises have been awarded to new groups, but neither McMaster nor pageant attorney Jack Plackter would say why the others – including longtime Miss Illinois Executive Director Fran Skinner-Lewis – were ousted.

Skinner-Lewis, who had run the Illinois pageant for 15 years, referred questions to lawyer David Walters.

"They gave no reason," Walters said. "And they insisted over and over again that it was 'without cause,' meaning they didn't have to give a reason. We're saying that under New Jersey law, they have to give the cause for the termination and have good reasons for that termination."

After hearing arguments Thursday, U.S. District Judge Milton Shadur in Chicago issued a temporary restraining order barring the national pageant from letting the new group take over. Shadur ordered the two sides to submit to arbitration to settle the dispute.

Illinois has been among the more successful pageants in the annual Miss America competition, with three winners since 1990 - Marjorie Vincent in 1991, Kate Shindle in 1998 and Erika Harold in 2003.

But the state pageant has also been criticized for adopting an anti-youth violence platform as an organization and forcing its winners to carry that platform when they compete in Atlantic City. In most states, a contestant uses the platform she competed on in the state pageant when she appears in Miss America.

The Miss Montana Scholarship Program was notified that its franchise was pulled in a two-paragraph letter sent by mail, former board Chairman Jack Lawson said Monday.

"It was like getting hit in the head with a hammer," he said. "They'd assured us and reassured us they were totally behind us."

The squabbling comes at an inopportune time for Miss America, which is searching for a new TV network following ABC's decision in October to drop it because of low ratings. The crowning of Miss America 2005 Deirdre Downs drew only 9.8 million viewers, a 500,000-viewer drop from the previous year.

Now, the Miss America Organization is pitching the annual beauty pageant to other networks and cable operators, hoping someone will step in to fill the void. In contrast to years past, the date for the 2005 Miss America pageant has yet to be set, owing to the uncertainty.

The pageant has an offer from a leading cable company on the table, but McMaster would not identify it.

"I think it's going very well. I've spent two or three days a week each month in Los Angeles, meeting with the networks. We've met with almost all the major networks and some cable networks as well," McMaster said.

Former Miss America CEO Leonard Horn called the timing of the franchise moves strange, given the bigger problems facing Miss America.

"To be fighting these franchises and fending off a federal suit while they try to find a network, I don't know how they're handling it," Horn said. "I know I wouldn't want to be there running it."

Painkiller sales decline

By Linda A. Johnson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

For years, Americans have been popping painkillers like they were candy to treat everything from headaches to arthritis. But new data shows America's love affair with the medications may have cooled off after the blockbuster drug Vioxx was pulled from the market over safety concerns.

New data show sales of prescription arthritis drugs plunged at the end of 2004, after Merck & Co. Inc. of Whitehouse Station, N.J., pulled Vioxx from the market Sept. 30 and a string of recent studies raised safety concerns about other widely used pain medicines.

Nonprescription pain reliever sales jumped by double digits in late 2004, but doctors and other pain experts believe many patients are simply suffering in silence, confused about what pain medication is best for them.

"I've been in practice for 30 years and I've never seen such a mess," said Dr. Michel Dubois, director of the New York University Pain Management Center.

He estimates about 20 percent of his patients have switched from Cox-2 inhibitors, the painkiller class including Vioxx and Pfizer Inc.'s Celebrex and Bextra, to narcotic painkillers or nonprescription ones. Another 20 percent have stopped taking painkillers altogether.

Advisers to the Food and Drug Administration meet for three days starting Wednesday to try to find a balance between the benefits and potential dangers of Cox-2 drugs. FDA eventually is likely to require strong warnings on the drugs' labels, further dampening Cox-2 sales, predicted independent pharmaceuticals analyst Hemant Shah of HKS & Co. in Warren, N.J.

However, like the Northwestern game, the Wildcats couldn't build or keep their lead.

K-State junior starter Brett Muegge went four innings, striking out four with one walk, and allowed seven hits and six runs, all earned.

"I had command early on," Muegge said. "I just need to be more mentally prepared for the big games. All we had done is practice against each other and we hadn't been in the big battle yet, so we didn't know how people would react."

The Wildcats couldn't get the big hits down the stretch, leaving 10 runners stranded on base.

"Talentwise, this is the best team I have ever played on," Blunt said. "We just need some time and to make more improvements and our potential should show through."

Hill believes the team has the talent, it will just take time for it all to come together.

"We have a lot of new faces and everyone is trying to find their roles on the team," Hill said. "We are playing confused out there and that's coaching. We didn't show the enthusiasm and we need to come together as a team."

The Wildcats (0-2) look to get their first win on the season as they travel to the Texas-Arlington Invitational later this week. They face Arkansas State at 11:30 a.m. on Friday, continue in action Saturday against Texas-Arlington, followed by an early season rematch against Northwestern.

ELECTION | Candidates raise variety of issues

When asked about his reasons for choosing to run, he said, "I felt that I could be an effective voice in helping our older neighborhoods to maintain their stability and to encourage reinvestment."

"The City Commission needs to focus on major policy issues instead of micromanaging the day-to-day operations of city hall," Phillips said.

The city government needs to do less micromanaging of its advisory boards and local officials and let them do the jobs that they are chosen to do. The public, especially college students, needs to know it has a say in local politics, Morris-Hardeman said.

"I would really love to see students get involved with local government. Only 100 students voted the last city election. Students still decide to register at home," she said.

The exception to the candidates' agreement was a question about requiring jobs created with economic development funds to enable families to live above poverty.

"If we're going to give tax support for businesses we ought to be able to expect the jobs provided to allow people to live in our community," Morris-Hardeman said.

While Morris-Hardeman was for raising the minimum wage in Manhattan for many job positions, Phillips said he couldn't support that initiative.

Phillips said he was for bringing high-paying jobs into Manhattan but didn't think it was the commission's job to do it.

Social services was an issue taken up by former commissioners Brad Everett and Mark Taussig, who aren't running in the current race.

"Their role for the government is very different from mine," Hubler said.

Celebrity witnesses to be called in trial

By Linda Deutsch
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Michael Jackson's lawyers announced Monday they may call celebrities such as Elizabeth Taylor, Diana Ross and Kobe Bryant to the witness stand during the pop star's molestation trial.

The list of possible witnesses sounded like coming attractions for a Hollywood spectacle: "Tonight Show" host Jay Leno, producer Quincy Jones, actor Chris Tucker and singer Stevie Wonder, along with Taylor, Ross and Bryant.

Names of defense and prosecution witnesses were revealed to prospective jurors so attorneys could find out if any of the more than 240 members of the pool had associations that may be important in selecting a jury for the trial.

But the judge advised the jury pool that some of the big names may be no-shows.

Attorneys are in the process of selecting 12 jurors and eight alternates who will decide Jackson's fate on charges that he molested a teenage cancer patient at his Neverland Ranch and plied him with alcohol.

Defense attorney Thomas Mesereau Jr. also named as possible witnesses Jackson's children Paris and Prince Michael, who have been raised in such seclusion that the public has never seen their faces.

Other, more recognizable faces in the ensemble included Backstreet Boy Nick Carter and his younger brother Aaron Carter, actor Corey Feldman, CBS correspondent Ed Bradley, CNN's Larry King, Fox broadcaster Rita Cosby, New Age guru Deepak Chopra, psychic Uri Geller, Las Vegas tycoon Steve Wynn and relatives of the late Marlon Brando.

Also listed was journalist Martin Bashir, whose 2003 TV documentary "Living With Michael Jackson" showed Jackson and his accuser holding hands and Jackson defending his practice of sharing his bed with children.

Study shows flu shots may not save elderly

By Carla K. Johnson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A study based on more than three decades of U.S. data suggests that giving flu shots to the elderly has not saved any lives.

Led by National Institutes of Health researchers, the study challenges standard government dogma and is bound to confuse senior citizens. During last fall's flu vaccine shortage, thousands of older Americans stood in long lines to get their shots.

"There is a sense that we're all going to die if we don't get the flu shot," said the study's lead author, Lone Simonsen, a senior epidemiologist at the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. "Maybe that's a little much."

The study should influence the nation's flu prevention strategy, Simonsen said, perhaps by expanding vaccination to schoolchildren, the biggest spreaders of the virus.

However, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta plans no change in its advice on who should get flu shots, saying the research isn't enough to shift gears.

"We think the best way to help the elderly is to vaccinate them," CDC epidemiologist William Thompson said. "These results don't contribute to changing vaccine policy."

The CDC currently recommends flu shots for people age 50 and over, nursing home residents, children 6-23 months, pregnant women, people with chronic health problems and certain health care and day care workers. When the vaccine was scarce a few months ago, healthy adults under 65 were urged to forgo the shot.

Although the study, published Monday in the Archives of Internal Medicine, looks at data from the whole U.S. elderly population over time, it doesn't directly compare vaccinated versus unvaccinated elderly, Thompson said. Previous studies that made that comparison found the vaccine decreased the rate of all winter deaths.

It's unlikely that a single study would trigger a change in policy, CDC spokesman Glen Nowak said.

But the former head of the nation's vaccine strategy, Dr. Walter Orenstein, said Simonsen's work "should make us think twice about our current strategy and (about) potentially enhancing it." Orenstein is the former director of the CDC's National Immunization Program and now leads a program for vaccine policy development at Emory University.

A shift to vaccinating schoolchildren, who are most likely to spread the virus, is advocated by colleagues of Orenstein's at Emory in a separate report to be published Tuesday in the American Journal of Epidemiology.

K-State students enjoy exercising, learning dance moves at new hip hop class offered at Peters Recreation Complex

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's like Aggieville on a Friday night – minus the cute outfits, mixed drinks and cigarette smoke, and plus athletic shoes, sweat pants and ponytails.

About 150 K-State students shake their groove things from 9:30 to 10:30 p.m. Mondays and from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. Fridays during the hip hop exercise class offered at Peters Recreation Complex.

The class, which was added this semester to the Wildcat Workout schedule, allows students to learn a choreographed dance as well as hip hop moves and stretches – all in one hour.

"We wanted to offer the students something different this semester," said Megan Anderson, instructor of the Friday class and sophomore in elementary education.

Anderson has taken dance classes since she was three and has taught dance since the age of 15.

The class begins with basic dance moves and stretches, followed by a session of choreographed moves to a pre-selected song of the day. The end of the class features students performing their new skills – to shouts and cheers when they get it right.

"It's not as intense as step aerobics, but people leave sweating," Anderson said. "It works a lot of different muscles than running or aerobics."

And for people with two left feet, have no fear. Anderson said the class is a great teaching tool for beginners.

"I've never danced before, but I always wanted to dance," Houlton said. "It's a fun way to work out. The whole running thing gets tiring."

Kelly Miller, second-year veterinary medicine student, said she decided to attend the class for fun – with a little convincing from a friend. Little did she know that she would be learning dance moves to N'Sync's "Pop."

"I didn't expect to learn a whole sequence," Miller said. "I thought we'd just dance around."

"It's a fun way to work out. The whole running thing gets tiring."

Steve Martini, associate director at the Rec Complex, said Anderson and Laura Jones, instructor of the Monday class, came to him last semester interested in beginning the class, but they couldn't because of scheduling conflicts.

This spring, though, Martini said he shifted the schedule around to include the class, which has attracted between 120 and 150 students each session. The class has become so popular, Martini said, that he has thought about adding another session some time after spring break.

"We're just glad people are attending it," he said. "Hopefully we can get another class this semester if time opens up, and we'll certainly remember that for the fall semester."

Obesity contributes to rise of diabetes

Decreased health, sedentary lifestyle increase risk of disease

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Several causes, some of which are controllable, have contributed to the rising numbers of Americans with diabetes.

Americans are currently spending $92 billion on direct health costs, including hospitalization, medical care and treatment, according to the National Institute of Diabetes, Digestive and Kidney Disorders.

"You can't slack off. You have to take care of yourself," Kirby Eads, freshman in mass communications, said. "Having a balanced diet and exercising is a part of that."

Eads is 18 years old and has known about his diabetes for 12 years.

He has type 1 diabetes, otherwise known as juvenile diabetes, in which the pancreas is unable to produce the necessary amount of insulin, a hormone that controls the body's processing of sugars.

The percentage of people with type 1 diabetes in the United States has increased from 3.5 to 4 percent in the last year for reasons which have yet to be understood, Dr. Richard Guthrie, a diabetes expert, said.

Guthrie said some current studies suggest that the rise of type 1 diabetes is related to the premature introduction of cow's milk to infants, but it's still too early to determine an overall cause.

The biggest increase is in type 2 diabetes, which is affected by lifestyle change, Guthrie said.

Cases of type 2 diabetes have increased from 9 to 10 percent over the last year.

Type 2 diabetes occurs when a person's body is unable to use the hormone already produced by the body.

"It all comes down to Newton's first law of thermal dynamics, inertia. If you want to put more matter (food) in, you have to be willing to burn it off or it will turn into fat," Guthrie said.

Type 2 diabetes is related to obesity and sedentary lifestyles, Guthrie said.

"Fat is resistant to insulin," he said. "Large amounts of fat wear out the pancreas."

The high number of aging baby-boomers is also a contributing factor, according to the NIDDK. The number of people with diabetes is expected to rise to 8.5 percent of Americans by 2025.

Guthrie said people eat too much, which is a big factor.

"Some drugs are currently being tested that lessen the desire to eat, but the best thing that we have is still eating better and increasing our amount of exercise," he said.

Repetitive motion increases injuries

Risk of injury can be lowered

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Performing the same motion frequently could cause an injury.

The injuries, often called repetitive motion injuries, can be prevented or postponed, if certain measures are taken.

Jeff Mathis, physical therapist at Mathis Rehab Center, said repetitive motion injuries have become more common over the years.

He said more is demanded from the body, without keeping the body in shape for it. From 1972 to 1994, there was a 140 percent increase in the number of repetitive motion injuries.

"It's no wonder there's an increase," Mathis said.

The injuries are caused by excessive usage of muscle, tendons and joints over time, he said.

"These conditions can differ in severity," Mathis said.

One way to prevent injuries is to keep in shape, he said.

When Mathis has a patient come in who is obese, doesn't exercise, smokes frequently and drinks several cups of coffee a day, he realizes there are lifestyle changes that need to be made, he said.

"I think this person is an accident waiting to happen," Mathis said. "The bigger issue would be keeping your body healthy."

"Good posture is a huge one," she said. "A lot of students have horrible posture."

Posture affects how people position themselves when doing activities such as typing, Prender said. Incorrect positioning of the wrists and slouching can result in injury. Carpal tunnel is caused by this.

Stretching can also help in injury prevention, she said.

Prender said she sees student athletes more than other students for repetitive motion injuries.

Shoulder injuries from throwing and knee injuries from running are common, she said.

Mathis said he sees elbow and wrist injuries from tennis, golf or other similar sports.

If an injury is suffered, Prender said to follow the RICE method, which is rest, ice, compression and elevation.

"Then they probably need to contact their physician," she said.

Injuries also should be dealt with promptly, Mathis said.

"As with just about anything else, the sooner you deal with it the better," he said. "The longer you wait, the harder it is to fix."

Mathis said managing pre-existing health conditions, lifestyle choices and the work environment helps ensure the injury doesn't occur again.

"The bottom line is you've got to control what you can control," he said.

A pre-existing condition such as diabetes may not be preventable, but taking care of it helps, Mathis said.

Bad life choices are preventable, he said. People don't have to smoke or drink coffee. They can eat a healthy diet and exercise.

Mathis said reviewing the way the activity that caused the injury is done can also help, so one can learn to perform it with the least amount of stress on the joints.

"Everybody thinks repetitive trauma is a mystery that just happens to people, but it's not," he said. "When you do all you can to manage these three things, your repetitive motion injuries will decrease."

Fast facts

Repetitive motion injuries

- 7 percent of the population suffers from RMI
- 14 percent of physician visits are for RMI
- 19 percent of hospital stays are RMI-related
- 62 percent of work-related injuries are RMI

AMY PRESTON

I dread going to the Peters Recreation Complex this time of year.

With New Year's resolutions of getting fit and losing weight still fresh in students' minds, going to the Rec Complex isn't my idea of having fun. Add in all of the Cancun hopefuls getting ready for spring break, and the fitness center is more like Porter's on a Saturday night – jam-packed.

This only creates problems for the regular Rec-goers like myself, who simply want to go in, let loose on the treadmill and weights for a few hours, and leave with the nice glow of sweat on the brow.

We're the ones who know the Rec employees by name and greet them with a smile each time they swipe our ID cards. We're the ones who have memorized the Wildcat Workout schedule. We're the ones who know how many calories each cardio machine says we burn, even though we know it's lying and only trying to make us feel better.

And we – or at least I – want the territory back.

But I can't, at least not until after spring break. So I'm stopping the temper tantrum right now and offering a little piece of my mind to those individuals who think they can only work out for three months out of the year and expect to live healthy the other nine.

It's great that the Rec Complex sees an increase this time of year. It means more people are caring about their health and mostly, what they look like. But why does it have to take a New Year's resolution to have the Rec at full capacity?

The truth is, physical activity should be maintained throughout the entire year, not just the three months leading up to Cancun.

And the government is now realizing this. It only took two out of every three Americans becoming obese to see that our country has become fat, lazy and downright unhealthy.

In January, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services released its new dietary guidelines – and Americans were shocked.

Apparently people didn't realize that in order to stay healthy, they must eat a balanced diet AND exercise daily, not just three months out of the year. Some Americans became outraged when they learned that HHS encouraged adults to exercise between 60 and 90 minutes most days of the week in order to help manage and prevent gradual, unhealthy weight gain.

It may seem difficult, but it's important to get that hour of exercise in each day, every day. Walk or bike to class instead of drive. Set the alarm early and visit Old Stadium to run stairs or the track. Start a basketball game with friends.

And – sigh – make frequent trips to the Rec Complex and become a Rec groupie, like myself. Because even though I cringe when thinking about the massive amounts of people at the Rec Complex this time of year, I also cringe to think about the future health of our generation when our metabolism slows down and it will take longer than a mere three months to look good in a two-piece.

Stress risks high among students

Counseling services available to help students cope with college

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stress is an issue for most college students.

"It's a normal part of being a human being," Rathbun said.

But there are ways of reducing the stress.

"They can manage it so that the number of physical stressors is less, and it will not affect them so much," he said.

Stress doesn't only affect the mind – it can also affect the body. Stress can not only lead to colds and flu, but can also lead to headaches, backaches and sleeping problems. Difficulty with concentration and focus can be a result of a lack of sleep caused by stress.

Stress can also trigger anxiety and can eventually lead to depression.

"It could also have physiological effects such as gastro and spinal disorders. In the worst case possible, it can introduce cardiovascular symptoms as well," Clive Fullagar, professor of psychology, said.

There are things that K-State students can do to manage stress.

In addition to time management, exercising and eating a balanced diet can also help reduce the effects of stress. But if the stressors are so overwhelming that they are a recurring problem, Rathbun said

Rec offers new programs

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students can take advantage of new classes and a long-term fitness program this semester at the Peters Recreation Complex.

Associate Director of Recreational Services Steve Martini said the Rec Complex has added Hip Hop and Cardio Blast to the list of 53 classes already offered free to students.

"They have been extremely popular," Martini said. "We only offer two sessions of Hip Hop now, but we're thinking of adding some after spring break."

On average, 30 to 35 people attend each exercise session, but the new classes have attracted up to 150.

"Cardio Blast is a good class," Crystal Groesbeck, graduate student in animal nutrition, said. "We've done a different workout every week. You get a variety. Sometimes it's kickboxing, sometimes it's floor aerobics."

Lora Yoakum, fitness instructor and sophomore in finance, said there are classes for every fitness level.

"There are beginning Step classes and most of the other classes have low-impact options," she said.

Yoakum said working out in a class setting is beneficial.

"It's a good way to mix up your workout," said Yoakum, who teaches six classes a week. "You have music and direction."

"I think it's a great way to work out," Stiens said. "It's easier when you have someone to lead you and push you."

"I like teaching Advanced Step because I feel like it's about my fitness level," Yoakum said. "It's challenging. With some of the other classes, I have to workout beforehand."

"It's just like anything else; you get out what you put in," he said.

Though most of the class participants are women, about a quarter of the people who come are men, Yoakum said.

"We get some guys at Abs and Back who are regulars, and there are also a lot at yoga recently," she said.

Groesbeck, who attends several classes each week, said it's nice to have the freedom to try different classes.

"If you find one you like, you can come every week. If not, it's not going to stop because you didn't come," she said.

Since the new classes have been so popular, the Rec Complex also hopes to offer personal training soon.

"We don't do personal training, but we'd like to have money for a certified wellness director," he said. "Most university recreation centers have one."

Next week, the Rec Complex will request funding from the student activity fee privilege committee to hire a wellness director.

The student activity fee pays for programs at the Rec Complex so they are free to students.

There are other health options offered by Recreational Services.

The Rec Complex has just started a six-week fitness program called Spring Break Training. For $15, students signed up to meet with a nutrition and fitness consultant once a week.

The 57 available openings in the program filled up in two days.

Students should avoid common nutrition, diet misconceptions

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are many misconceptions about what constitutes a healthy diet and college students are particularly susceptible to these.

One common mistake is skipping breakfast.

Sandy Procter, registered dietician and nutrition educator, said when people eat breakfast, they are able to avoid overeating later in the day.

"People who are trying to lose weight think that if they skip breakfast, they'll keep their total calories down, but we know from research that if people eat breakfast, they actually eat fewer total calories," Procter said.

Breakfast provides fuel for the body, said Mary Meck Higgins, assistant professor in the Department of Human Nutrition.

"A lot of students don't eat breakfast, and then they haven't fueled up their bodies for the day," she said.

Experts also warn against following plans that cut out entire food groups.

"By eliminating foods, we aren't satisfied, and we are setting ourselves up for not being able to stick with it," Procter said.

This is especially true for something as necessary as carbohydrates.

"We use grains and carbohydrates for short-term energy, brain function and regulating our moods," Procter said.

"Calories are what cause you to gain weight, and any time you cut out a major food group, you're bound to eat less calories."

In a college setting, it's also important to emphasize eating to be healthy, not just to be thin, Procter said.

"They say, 'You can never be too thin or too rich,' but that's a misguided thought," Procter said.

"This is an age with a lot of eating disorders."

Higgins also recommends buying cans of tuna packed in water and frozen juice concentrate instead of soda.

"There's the idea that healthful foods are not as convenient, but what's more convenient than a banana?" Higgins said.

"You don't even have to wash it."

When choosing bread, Higgins said, students should also check the label for the term "whole grains."

"When it says 'multi-grain,' that doesn't mean it's better for you.

"It may just mean that it contains corn, oats and wheat," she said.

"Multivitamins are a cost-effective purchase for college students," Procter said.

that it would be time to get help.

"If it reaches the point where you are aware of it, you need to seek a counselor.

"A few sessions could help you get some techniques to reduce the stressors, so you can move on with your life," he said.

Barbara Pearson, psychologist with Counseling Services, said students can attend individual or group sessions to deal with stress.

"We really look at the individual needs of each student," she said. "They'll be meeting with a therapist to really decide what works best for them."

After having an individual session, students may decide to attend a group session, Pearson said.

The group sessions are small, she said.

"We keep our groups really small, so they are just personal," Pearson said.

Groups are attractive to students, because they realize they are not alone, she said.

"People that have been in groups said they have been really helpful," Pearson said. "It helps normalize their feelings."

Stress management is taught to all groups, she said. Then, each group has its own focus.

As the semester progresses, more students seek counseling, Pearson said.

"As the semester starts to get more difficult and more demanding, we certainly see more students coming in for support and help," she said.

"As stress builds, we certainly see more students coming in because they are juggling so much with work and school and family and just needing some support support and direction."

Fort Riley welcomes home 150 soldiers from Iraq Tuesday

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four brothers wearing "I heart daddy" shirts got to see their dad again Tuesday night.

The soldiers are with the 82nd Medical Company, which was deployed for the second time, Feb. 14, 2004.

Teddi Jo Reynolds said she had the shirts made for Father's Day for a picture.

"It's their favorite T-shirt, so it was appropriate for tonight," she said.

Her oldest son, Theodore, 5, had the hardest time adjusting to Ryan being gone, Teddi said.

"He's the only one that really remembers my husband," she said. "He'll say, 'well if daddy can fly, why can't he fly home?"

Morgan and Logan, both 3, and Skyler, 2, expect their dad to be gone, Teddi said. They saw him last in November for two weeks, while he was granted rest and relaxation.

"They only think he's going to be home for a couple weeks," she said. "They don't understand he's going to be home for a while."

Being away from his wife and kids was difficult for Ryan, he said.

"My wife told me all four boys have grown five inches," Ryan said. "That's five inches I'm going to miss."

When he's going to be gone for a year, Teddi said she had to adapt to raising their children by herself. She was told he would be gone for 12 to 18 months.

"The day after they leave you stop crying, and you get back in your daily routine right away," Teddi said.

College student leaders extend Christ's love to middle schoolers

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Genny Short, junior in family studies and human services, became a lifeguard at a Young Life camp, she was astonished by the number of middle school youth attending the camp who wanted to learn more about Jesus Christ.

She was already a leader of Young Life, a group where high school students play games and have fellowship at a student's house every Monday night. Short knew there needed to be something similar to Young Life for middle school students.

"WyldLife is an organization that is geared toward sharing the good news of the gospel."

Genny Short
JUNIOR IN FAMILY STUDIES AND HUMAN SERVICES

She contacted Luke Feather, Young Life area director, and started WyldLife, a gospel-based organization led by volunteers for middle school youth.

"WyldLife is an organization that is geared toward sharing the good news of the gospel," Short said. "It's showing that there is something out there for them."

Feather said the purpose of WyldLife is for the volunteers to earn the right to be heard. He wants the youth to trust the leaders to share the gospel and to be there for them.

He said he also wants the volunteers to develop leadership skills and to discover vision for their own ministries.

Although WyldLife is similar to Young Life, Short said WyldLife has more activities because of the energy of the youth involved.

"Middle schoolers are more active and need more freedom," Short said.

Ellen Roberson, middle school student in WyldLife, said the group is a fun way to learn about the gospel.

Attorneys select jurors in Murray trial

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Day two of jury deliberations ended with 46 prospective jurors for the Thomas Murray murder trial.

Murray, K-State English professor, has been charged with the murder of his ex-wife, Carmin Ross. The trial begins Thursday, according to the Topeka Capital-Journal.

The 46 potential jurors, which were selected Monday and Tuesday, will be narrowed to 12 jurors and three alternates today. On Monday, 17 people were dismissed from the jury pool and 16 were dismissed Tuesday, according to the Capital-Journal.

Of the 46 jurors, the prosecution and defense attorneys will dismiss an equal number.

The trial is expected to last four to six weeks, according to the Lawrence Journal-World, and testimony begins Thursday morning in Lawrence.

Lead prosecutor Angela Wilson to the Capital-Journal that expert witnesses by Douglas County will include crime scene experts in DNA, footwear impressions, fingerprints and blood-spatter interpretation.

New meningitis vaccine released

By Maria Ladron de Guevara
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Federal Drug Administration approved a new vaccine, Menactra, that prevents meningitis for twice as long as the old vaccine.

According to Sanofi pasteur, the company releasing the vaccines, Menactra is specifically recommended for students living in residence halls because of the increased exposure to other students who may carry the virus.

Menactra can be given to children as young as 11 years old, and the vaccine is supposed to last around eight years.

Jay Reppert, medical director at Lafene Health Center, said it would be useful to get the vaccine.

"It's an effective vaccine," Reppert said. "It covers the same as the previous one, but its effects should be longer."

According to Sanofi pasteur, the vaccine should cost around $80, and some insurance companies may cover the vaccines, especially now that they are recommended by the FDA.

Debbie Shaver, registered nurse at the Riley County Health Department, said the financial aspect of the vaccine may become an obstacle.

"It's not a cheap vaccine," Shaver said. "Not all insurance companies are covering them."

This may particularly be the case for many college students.

"It depends on the financial situation," Reppert said. "If you can afford it, it's a good thing."

Shaver said that even though the vaccine is not required, she encourages parents to have their kids vaccinated.

The battle against hangovers turns scientific

Illustrations by Brandon Brewster | COLLEGIAN

IOWA CITY, Iowa – From drinking children's diarrhea medicine to sprinting miles to gobbling supplements, students have all kinds of tricks to beat, or at least combat – the aches and pains of the morning after a night of gulping alcoholic beverages.

But Mike Teague, a University of Iowa leisure-studies professor, has a warning: Buyer beware.

"I certainly don't validate them," he said. "They're loosely regulated by the Food and Drug Administration, which means they're really not regulated."

Teague, who teaches classes about substance abuse, said new-age nutritional supplements have become a mainstay for heavy drinkers looking for a quick fix.

One local vendor, Nutrisport Nutrition Superstore and Tropical Smoothie Cafe, features energy and hydration supplements – some claim to prevent and others to cure symptoms for the all-night partier.

Manager Jason Campbell said he often sees the effects of too much booze from his patrons' zombie-like expressions on Fridays and Saturdays.

"You look at them, and you can tell why they ordered a Morning After," he said.

The Morning After is a smoothie concoction of orange and banana blended with Emer'gen-C Pack, a supplement packed with 1,000 milligrams of Vitamin C – more than 16 times the FDA's recommended daily dosage – and electrolytes, which are required by cells to regulate the electric charge and flow of water molecules across the cell membranes.

While Campbell sells antidotes, he is personally sold on more traditional anti-hangover measures. His antidote of choice is 40 minutes of heart-pumping exercise.

"I know if I'm out drinking, I'm not going to worry about popping pills," he said.

When asked about the practice of sweating out toxins, Teague balked.

He said exercise could marginally reduce headaches.

PHEROMONES MAY ENHANCE SEX APPEAL

ST. LOUIS - Can't manage to lure any girls home to your dorm room? Don't worry. Someday you may be able to trick them into loving submission by your scent – no insane workout schedules or two-inch skirts required.

Researchers in Professor Timothy Holy's laboratory at the University of Washington in St. Louis's School of Medicine have recently shed some light on the role of pheromones in sexual attraction.

Pheromones are small, odorless molecules that are secreted along with sweat and urine. They were originally identified in silkworm moths as a powerful sexual attractant, causing male moths to flap their wings wildly. Just imagine what pheromones might do to your object of unrequited passion.

Sadly, moth pheromones don't work on humans, unless, of course, you'd like to date a male moth, which, although impractical, would make a great Jerry Springer episode.

In 1986, Dr. Winifred Cutler stepped up the research from insects to humans. She discovered that women who have frequent sex have more regular menstrual cycles than more celibate women. Researchers quickly pinpointed the source of these discrepancies – male pheromones.

After that, more findings gushed forth, implicating pheromones in fertility, depression and sexual appetite. With the right pheromones, you could not only lure in unsuspecting, out-of-your-league coeds, but it would make them happy at the same time. But beware the increased fertility.

Holy and his students are investigating the molecules that control pheromone detection. They use a unique approach that consists of spreading neurons across a surface, exposing them to pheromones and measuring their responses.

In the meantime, guys may have to resort to old-fashioned means of attraction such as flowers, cologne and a bottle of peach schnapps. As for you girls, don't throw away those two-inch skirts just yet.

Journalist debates pros, cons of affirmative action

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students and faculty gathered yesterday in the K-State Student Union to hear about the pros and cons of affirmative action and how to maintain diversity on campus.

The Black Student Union funded the event that brought George Curry, a respected journalist and author of "The Affirmative Action Debate," to K-State to discuss the topic and engage in a question-and-answer session.

Curry began with the arguments for and against affirmative action in the United States.

The arguments against included: the policies promote inequality, society should be colorblind, a person should advance on individual traits alone and the Civil Rights Act of 1964 solved racism issues and expanded the black middle class.

Arguments in favor included: this country has never been colorblind, the Jim Crow laws were in effect until the 1960s and discrimination is based on race or gender so the remedy should be based on race and gender, as well.

Curry used the analogy of running a race to explain his stance on the issue and confirm that affirmative action is not reverse racism.

"Affirmative action gets you in the door but it doesn't keep you there."

George Curry
JOURNALIST

"If a runner has a 400 year head start to a race, those runners without the head start will never be able to catch up on their own," Curry said.

His stance also emphasized that everyone should understand that if a person of any minority race or gender is not qualified, affirmative action cannot help them.

"Affirmative action gets you in the door, but it doesn't keep you there," Curry said.

Marlon Butler, BSU vice president and junior in kinesiology, agreed with the speaker.

"Minorities have to be qualified in areas outside of just their race to benefit from affirmative action," Butler said.

Butler also said the speaker benefited BSU by informing them of many aspects of the program.

"Listening to Curry makes our group more aware to the issues and educates us to the process of affirmative action," Butler said.

Curry also touched on how campuses can become more diverse. He said that on predominately white campuses, it is important for the administration to help minority students feel comfortable in order to raise their retention rates.

"It is imperative that minority students don't get a sense of isolation from the beginning," Curry said. "Pairing the new student with a junior or senior to get them acquainted is a good method of preventing this."

The event was originally scheduled to be a debate over the issue between Curry and Armstrong Williams, a conservative speaker, but due to financial reasons, BSU could only bring in one speaker.

Gloria Conner, BSU member and sophomore in accounting, said Curry's analogies helped her better understand affirmative action.

"There was an inadequate starting point from the beginning, and affirmative action is just getting everyone back to the same starting point," Conner said. "It is not counter-racism."

Sales tax for education funding to be placed on April 5 ballot

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Applause filled the City Commission meeting room Tuesday night after commissioners voted to place a sales tax intended to support public schools on the April 5 ballot.

"It's our responsibility to put this tax on the ballot and allow the citizens a right to vote on the issue," Commissioner Bruce Snead said.

The 0.25 percent sales tax was proposed by the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 Board of Education with the goal of sustaining quality education. The tax funds would also be used to accommodate the expected additional military families from Fort Riley.

The sales tax proposal was first presented to the Commission at its Feb. 1 meeting, but it was not approved. The Commission moved to amend the proposal to provide itself with the sole ability to terminate the sales tax once the proceeds reached $5.4 million.

The amended proposal was unanimously approved by the Board, but some felt it wasn't very clear-cut when it appeared again before the Commission.

"I'm unable to vote in favor of this because I don't think it's absolutely necessary," Commissioner Mark Taussig said. "We already have a quality school district. To say we need more money to have a quality school district doesn't make sense."

"A quality school is the best key to providing healthy neighborhoods. If this tax isn't approved and our school district doesn't find another form of revenue, we can lose the strong community we have."

Phyllis Peas
MANHATTAN RESIDENT

Phyllis Peas, Manhattan community member, has children who attend Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School. She said the tax will play a necessary role in improving the Manhattan community.

"A quality school is the best key to providing healthy neighborhoods," she said. "If this tax isn't approved and our school district doesn't find another form of revenue, we can lose the strong community we have."

Manhattan residents aren't the only one if favor of the tax. Ben Fenwick, College of Arts and Sciences student senator, said the student government approved the tax.

"A lot of grad students have children attending Manhattan schools, and we feel that a quality school district will attract more grad students and also help recruit faculty for KSU," Fenwick, senior in political science, said.

The Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce is also in favor of the amended tax proposal. President Lyle Butler said the Chamber was planning to work with other organizations and businesses to promote public support of the sales tax.

Since the amended tax proposal was approved with a 3-1 vote, it will be submitted to the county clerk and will appear on the April 5 ballot. Snead said the voters should learn about the school budget plans before they decide how to vote.

"I encourage all community members to become educated about the school budget in order to make an informed decision on this issue," he said.

TO THE POINT

Affirmative Action policies outdated

Affirmative action was once needed to ensure everyone in America was getting a fair break.

But as society has progressed, the policy has become a form of reverse discrimination with jobs potentially going to less qualified applicants because of their minority status.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

There's no argument that a more diverse company or university will generate more perspectives and ideas – enriching the experience and quality of life for everyone involved. But diversity can be achieved without such a policy.

Prospective employers or university admissions officials should choose employees or students based on their qualifications, no matter the person's race or gender.

It is ironic that the policy aims to fight for equality, but only furthers resentment and treats some people with an unfair advantage.

Employers should attempt to recruit applicants of all races, genders and perspectives, but then make a decision based on skills and job experience.

We still have a long way to go and there's no denying that the past is hard to overcome. But, it's time to move away from discrimination policies and toward diversity goals that are fair to all people.

This country has become more tolerant than some could have ever imagined and the fact that Affirmative Action is still a part of our culture, disputes the vary notion that we are an equal nation.

Modern gladiators

Violence in sports is as old as the games themselves

DAVID LIANG

While watching the Super Bowl this year, I inadvertently found myself rooting for the Eagles. It wasn't because I liked Philadelphia more, nor was it because I had something against New England.

The truth was pretty simple: the Eagles were competing against a team that had won twice in the past three years, and I always support the underdogs.

But as I watched the oversized men brutally pounce and jump on top of each other in the middle of a stadium full of hysterical fans, another image crept into my mind: that of a Roman gladiatorial amphitheater.

If you think about it, the similarities between the two sports are really quite striking.

The most obvious one is the violence. To the untrained eye, it would seem almost as if the football was included in the game solely to give players a reason to attack the person holding it.

Call it what you want: teamwork, strategy or sausage-fest. At the end of the day, it still boils down to plain and simple violence.

Granted, people don't usually get killed in football games like in gladiatorial combat, but moderate to severe injuries are virtually guaranteed. In fact, the early days of football were so marred with deaths that Theodore Roosevelt had to personally order reforms to the game in the early 1900s to make it safer.

Anybody who has watched at least a few games of football will immediately pick up the military references like "blitzes" and "shotguns." Indeed, any football fan will tell you that the sport's main attraction is its likeness to war and field strategies. I've had more than one friend tell me that "football is war."

Two thousand years ago, the Romans saw gladiatorial fights as precisely the same thing: popular entertainment through the simulation of war itself. The massive Flavian Amphitheater was designed to recreate all kinds of warfare, even naval battles. The imperial Romans always had a taste for war, but that wasn't always readily available, so they solved the problem by locking a few slaves with weapons in an arena and telling them to fight for their lives.

Gladiators were the sports superstars of their day, idolized by men, women and children alike. Portraits of gladiators were often painted on walls and public porticos. Figurines, lamps, sculptures and other artifacts featuring gladiatorial combat were made by the thousands. Does this idolatry not sound familiar?

The career of a modern football player is also like that of a gladiator: glamorous, exciting and short. An injury serious enough could sideline a player for life and effectively end his career. Like fallen gladiators, the names of these once celebrated players can rapidly fade into obscurity.

And then there's the crowd. In a football game, each great sack, interception or tackle is met with great roars of approval, very much reminiscent of the multitude of people at the Coliseum who would cheer the victor and point their thumbs downwards, allowing him to decapitate the fallen.

Sometimes I wonder if I would have been a fan of gladiatorial combat had I lived during the time of the Romans. On one hand, I'd like to think my rational side would steer me away from any association with that cruel sport. On the other hand, I'm not quite sure if societal pressure and social norms would have made me watch it anyway.

Ah yes, social norms. If the Super Bowl wasn't so hyped and popular, nothing in the world would prompt me to spend an entire evening watching a bunch of men mindlessly crashing into each other – nothing.

Kindness, forgiveness helps neighborly relationships

JULIA STOSKOPF

Forgive me, Father, for I have sinned. In addition to any mortal sins I may have committed since the last time I spoke to You, I have violated the first clause of Proverbs 14:21 almost every day since I returned to Manhattan last August: "He that despiseth his neighbor sinneth." Oops.

I don't really despise my neighbors; it's just that sometimes their loud music reverberates through my bedroom during the wee hours of the morning. But, hey – who doesn't like to fall asleep to muffled rock 'n' roll?

While names have been omitted to protect the innocent, the following story is absolutely true.

Let's start with the facts.

All I really know about my neighbors is their first names and what kinds of cars they drive. But I'm not alone in my absence of knowledge, because I doubt they know much about me.

I don't really know who my neighbors are at all. That's the problem. Besides the occasional conversation or emotionally draining screaming match, what have I really cared to pay attention to? Why are they really so rude and angry? On the flip side, what have they learned about me from some of my less–than–admirable antics?

I doubt this is just my problem. How many K–State students know who lives next door? We may know their names, but when roommates and housemates and neighbors change at least once a year, and we're all as busy as we claim to be – working, studying and drinking in Aggieville – who has the time to talk to the people next door?

By not knowing them, we all spend even more time out of our days complaining about neighbors: the old lady who preys on parking spots, the violent couple constantly fighting, the sexually–active moaner who lets you hear every scream or the rock band practicing at inconvenient times.

While these stories make topics of conversation and gossip, the situations can get out of hand. When they do, life becomes hell for everyone involved.

Trust me on this one.

The solution?

Most of us are all too stubborn to admit that there are times when we're just plain grouchy. I know I'm not the most amiable person in the world in the middle of the night before a huge exam or a 7:30 a.m. class. But have I apologized? Well, yes, but I was in mediation with my leasing agent at the time, so I don't know if it was accepted as genuine.

In tense situations, we all just need to take a deep breath and stop – not to smell the roses, but simply to be a little more considerate of the people upstairs, downstairs, next door or down the street.

We should follow the example of intelligent, cunning people like one of my friends who, with the assistance of her roommates, baked cookies and gave them to each of their neighbors along with their cell phone numbers. As a consequence, they have never had a complaint filed against them regardless of the size of their parties.

If we just knew a little bit more about one another, maybe we would all be more willing to let things slide.

While I probably will remain in a constant battle with the neighbors upstairs, maybe my stubbornness and my struggles can teach someone else how to deal with problem neighbors.

Forgive me, for though I know that I, too, can be in error, I will probably never admit it to anyone else.

Oops. I guess I just screwed that up, too.

Salina proceeds with plans

By Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Student Life Center is under way at K-State-Salina.

Although it is still in the planning and development phase, Bill Grevas, senior director in development, said they hope to break ground in October 2006.

Grevas estimated the facility will cost $7 million.

It will be similar to the K-State Student Union on the Manhattan campus.

Kristin Magette, coordinator of public relations at Salina, said that while it will be similar to the Union, there will be some differences.

"We need a building that will combine a union, recreational facility and offices," she said.

Magette said that such a facility has been in the long-range plans since Kansas College and Technology merged with K-State to form K-State-Salina in 1991.

"It has been on-going for years but has become a priority in the last three or four years," Magette said.

K-State-Salina has about 900 students, Magette said. For social interaction, students hang out in the current Student Activity Center, located in the library.

"The equipment is older and is not convenient, being far from campus," she said.

The hope for this new facility is to provide a common site for students to interact, Magette said.

The development of what will occupy the space is flexible. A bookstore, cafeteria and student leadership offices are a few options under consideration.

"We want to make it one-stop shop," Grevas said.

There has been a need for this for quite a while, he said.

"This will make an impact for recruiting and retaining students," Grevas said.

"There are people in the community who didn't graduate from K-State, but are very happy about it."

Magette said getting a Student Activity Center is important for K-State-Salina.

"This is a project we know is a priority, and we're taking the necessary steps to see that it happens," she said.

Dennis Kuhlman, K-State-Salina dean, said before the Student Activity Center is built, there are steps that need to be followed.

"There is a process and students on campus will have a chance to review and vote if they are in support of the plan," he said.

It is too early in the development to tell if there will be an increase in the tuition and fees from the project, Kuhlman said.

"At this stage, we haven't put together any specific plans that would detail," Kuhlman said.

Although details are sketchy, Kuhlman said he is excited about this project.

With the GlobalFlyer event at K-State-Salina, Kuhlman said running other events is difficult.

"You need to have the ability to do more than one thing at a time," he said.

Rezoning to increase housing

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 800 block of Moro Street is gearing up for changes.

Calvin Emig, Wildcat Property Management developer, went before the city planning board to get a rezoning plan for unit development.

The plan will go before the City Commission March 1.

The plan is to build 16 townhouses for students or families, Emig said.

Steve Zilkie, city planner, said the rezoning project will affect K-State students.

"The development will provide a housing option for students at close proximity to campus and within walking distance," he said.

Geri Garretson, 804 Moro St., was originally against the development.

She said she changed her mind after Emig made developments at eighth and Bluemont.

"I had protested these developments, too, but was unsuccessful," Garretson said.

Two concerns with the development have been parking lots and rain runoff.

Zilkie said the city engineer reviewed reports for safe and adequate parking and storm order provisions for the development.

Emig said there are no problems with the development.

"It is an excellent development that's being planned. We hope to offer affordable housing for families and K-State students," Emig said.

The development is currently in the planning stages.

Emig said the rezoning process has begun and he anticipates the building will start this summer.

"There is a need for good quality student housing. We plan to fulfill some of that need," Emig said.

Right time for Malone

ANTHONY MENDOZA

Karl Malone has always spoken his mind– sometimes to a fault– but when he said he would have a decision about his playing future to the San Antonio Spurs by the All-Star break, he did not back down.

His answer – retirement.

Malone, second all-time in scoring behind Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, is walking away without a championship, nixing the chance to play alongside the best all-around player in the NBA– the Spurs' Tim Duncan– and the chance to get the coveted ring he missed out on three times in his 19-year career.

The Mailman should not be remembered for the way his career ended, sitting on the bench as the eventual champion Detroit Pistons pounded the Los Angeles Lakers, but rather for his 18 years in Utah.

Malone redefined the power forward position.

He brought finesse and a nastiness that does not exist in the present-day game. His sharp elbows and knees were always up to knock away potential defenders who dared to challenge him.

Was Malone a dirty player at times?

It was the edge they had that made them great, fearless competitors who instilled fear in their rivals and kept opponents on their heels defensively.

I was never a Malone fan when he was with the Jazz.

When he joined the Lakers last season, I had my reserves. He was the enemy for so many years – the man who ultimately drove Johnson back into retirement after he made comments about his fear of playing with someone who was HIV positive.

He won me over, though. Malone played hard every game.

Unlike Gary Payton, he checked his ego at the door and did all the little things it took for the Lakers to win. His scoring was down, which eventually cost him the all-time scoring lead, but he never complained and just went out and defended some of the talented younger power forwards in the Western Conference and held his own.

Malone was the sidekick the Lakers had been searching for to play alongside a defensively- inept Shaquille O'Neal.

More importantly, he was the glue of the team, and when he got injured, the Lakers fell apart.

The Mailman– second all-time in minutes played, third in games played and sixth in rebounds– was the ultimate competitor. He never missed games until last year. His jump shot and free throws got better each year he played, and his percentage of body fat decreased yearly due to his freakish workout regime.

The time was right for Malone to walk away from the game. There is not a reason for him to tarnish his career by jumping from team to team chasing the ring.

His career as the overall best power forward to play the game is firmly cemented, even if he never delivered a championship to Utah or Los Angeles.

Former K-Staters return to Manhattan during offseason

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Leckey

Lilja

They say you don't know what you've got until it's gone.

For former K-State football offensive linemen Nick Leckey and Ryan Lilja, that phrase has become a reality.

"When I was at K-State, I was always looking forward to getting out," Leckey said. "Once I was out, I wanted to come back."

So he did. And Lilja joined him.

"What can I say? Manhattan just sucks you back in," Lilja said.

"Yeah, I love the Early Edition – I'm kind of a breakfast guy," Leckey said.

"I'm more of a Pita Pit guy myself," Lilja said.

Food - one reason to return to Manhattan.

Despite playing in the NFL – Lilja for the Indianapolis Colts and Leckey for the Arizona Cardinals – the tandem isn't too proud to come back to their roots.

During the off-season, while most players are vacationing, the duo opted to reside in the Little Apple.

"In the off-season, guys scatter like roaches in the light," Lilja said. "Me and Nick scattered to Manhattan."

The situation, according to the two best friends, is actually very ideal.

"It feels like I'm back in college, but it's better than college because I have no responsibilities," Lilja said.

The only responsibility the two hold is to simply stay in shape during the off-season and return to their respective locations April 4. In Manhattan, the two can work out for free and have even been given guidelines for lifting from their former offensive coach at K-State.

Both Leckey and Lilja also plan on devoting some of their time to coach Bill Snyder and to helping the current football team.

"We just want to go back and hang out with the old guys and meet the new guys," Lilja said. "We want to help out the guys that are entering the draft – give them advice if they need it."

After one season in the NFL– a life-changing experience– the two said– the duo definitely has valuable advice.

"It's a fantasy world out there," Leckey said. "You have to be careful not to get caught in the hype."

"Yeah, it's been a real eye-opener this year," Lilja said. "Just forcing yourself to get out of Kansas and your comfort zone – it's been unbelievable."

While the two shared similar first-season experiences, they also had a few differences.

For one, Lilja was immediately thrust into the Colts' starting line-up, after starting guard Rick DeMulling was injured at the beginning of the season.

"When they throw you into the frying pan like that, you've got to force yourself to adapt," Lilja said.

Adapting wasn't a problem for Lilja. He was awarded the game ball in his first NFL game against the Chicago Bears.

"That was my best game of the year," Lilja said. "We rushed for over 300 yards and didn't give up any sacks."

Leckey, on the other hand, only appeared in one game this season as a tight end.

Despite his minimal play, Leckey said he still found the season to be rewarding.

"I was very happy with the season," Leckey said. "I was introduced to professionalism and work ethic and was actually very prepared thanks to K-State."

Another difference between Leckey and Lilja's seasons was their teams' success. While the Colts made the playoffs only to lose to the eventual Super Bowl Champions the New England Patriots, the Cardinals didn't quite make it.

Lilja said he was proud of his team's efforts, but the loss to the Patriots was difficult.

"It almost makes it worse that the Patriots were the Super Bowl champs, because if we beat them, it means we would've been good enough to beat anyone," Lilja said.

One similarity the two shared, however, was their rookie status. A status, the two agreed, that was less than enjoyable.

"Let's put it this way – I kept my mouth shut a lot," Leckey said. "I was told rookies should be seen and not heard."

"We weren't hazed much," Lilja said, "but we had to pay for the older guys' dinners at restaurants and bring them drinks – stuff like that.

"I'm looking forward to losing my rookie status."

Both are also looking forward to next season and trying to earn a consistent starting position, which, Lilja said, is often unknown until the first game.

But even that is in doubt.

Although the two are both under contract, Lilja for one more year and Leckey for two, they still have to officially make the team each year.

While the uncertainty of the NFL is unsettling at times, it is what drives them to do their best, the duo said.

"You've gotta go out there and do your best everyday," Leckey said. "Each year you're more of a liability with the team because they have to pay you more.

Although their lives have changed in many ways, Leckey and Lilja both said their values haven't changed.

Lilja has only made one purchase, a new Tahoe, while Leckey has invested his money – most of it that is.

"I gave some money to my mom and my sister," Leckey said. "It's great to have a little coin and have no debt."

"Spending money is not much of a concern anymore," Lilja said. "That's the only big difference in my life."

"We're going to buy a boat," Lilja said. "But we'll wait until the summer."

For now, the two are content

During the off-season, Ryan Lilja enjoys his break with his friend Nick Leckey in Manhattan where they live together and stay in shape.

Nick Leckey and Ryan Lilja will spend the off season in Manhattan, helping coach Bill Snyder with the current football team. Leckey and Lilja play in the NFL and are members of the Arizona Cardinals and Indianapolis Colts, respectively.

GREENSBORO, N.C. — The Atlantic Coast Conference will use instant reply on an experimental basis beginning with the 2005 football season.

The proposal, drawn up by the league's athletics directors, was approved unanimously by the faculty representatives at the conference's winter meetings.

Following the discussions, as well as a presentation by David Parry, national coordinator of college football officials and coordinator of Big Ten football officials, and Tommy Hunt, the coordinator of ACC football officials, the league voted to base its system on the Big Ten's model and to look at any possible variances allowed within NCAA guidelines.

The NCAA football rules committee voted last week to give conferences the opportunity to use instant reply on an experimental basis for the 2005 season.

CINCINNATI — The Bengals used their franchise tag Tuesday on running back Rudi Johnson, who set a Cincinnati rushing record last season but couldn't secure a long-term deal.

Johnson

By using the tag on Johnson, the Bengals can keep him for $6.3 million next season while waiting to see whether first-round draft pick Chris Perry pans out. A hamstring injury and a hernia essentially wiped out Perry's rookie season.

Although Johnson wanted a long-term deal, the Bengals were more inclined to take it one year at a time. The Bengals are trying to overhaul their defense in the off season, a higher priority than investing more money in the running back position.

Tennis | Clijsters wins first match in four months

ANTWERP, Belgium — Former No. 1 Kim Clijsters beat Jelena Kostanic of Croatia 6-2, 6-3 in the Diamond Games on Tuesday in her first match in four months.

Clijsters

Clijsters said the left wrist injury that sidelined her in 2004 did not bother her as she opened the defense of her hometown title.

"So far, so good," Clijsters told the crowd of more than 10,000. "I had good backhands, not always perfect ones, but that is to be expected at this point. I hope all will go better now."

CBB | Savannah State goes winless for the season

SAVANNAH, Ga. — Maybe in a few years, they'll be able to look back on this season and chuckle just a bit.

The Savannah State Tigers went through an entire season without winning even one game, only the second NCAA Division I team in the last half-century to reach the gold standard for futility.

ESPN even did live "cut-ins" during its regular programming to provide updates on Savannah State's quest for infamy Monday night. The Tigers gave their best showing of the season but still lost to Florida A&M 49-44, wrapping up an 0-28 season.

They joined Prairie View in the hall of infamy. The Texas school went 0-28 in 1991-92 — the only other Division I team in the last 50 years to endure a winless season.

NEW YORK — The NHL has made its final offer.

The players' association has until Wednesday at 11 a.m. to accept a $42.5 million salary cap or the season will be canceled, a source close to the negotiations told The Associated Press on condition of anonymity.

There were no negotiations on Tuesday, only a letter from the league to players' association executive director Bob Goodenow that stated the NHL's demand.

The most significant movement toward a settlement since the lockout began in September came Tuesday morning when the players' association came off its reluctance to a salary cap and proposed one.

The cap the players offered was a soft cap of $52 million, another source close to the negotiations told the AP on condition of anonymity.

A few small, stylish items can transform an entire wardrobe

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Do you suffer from a severe case of boredom every time you open your closet doors? Accessories are a simple way to breathe new life into your wardrobe without spending hundreds of dollars.

"People tend to stay away from accessorizing. They think it might be too bold," Anne Beverlin, assistant manager of the Gap at Manhattan Town Center, said.

Most accessories can be easily coordinated to complement clothes already owned. Women can add a bright-colored handbag, patterned scarf belt or pair of ballet flats to give a touch of sophistication to any ensemble. A leather cuff bracelet or striped belt gives a low-key yet stylish edge to even the most casual guy's T-shirt and jeans.

Autumn Byrne, sales associate at Krystallos on Poyntz Avenue, said accessories can be used to accentuate certain colors in your clothes, or even a favorite physical feature.

"Pick what you want the focal point of your outfit to be and choose accessories based on that point," Byrne said.

When in a hurry, adding an accessory often eliminates the need to change clothes between day and night. Katie Pavlish, sophomore in photography, said that when she is pressed for time, she relies on jewelry to complete her look.

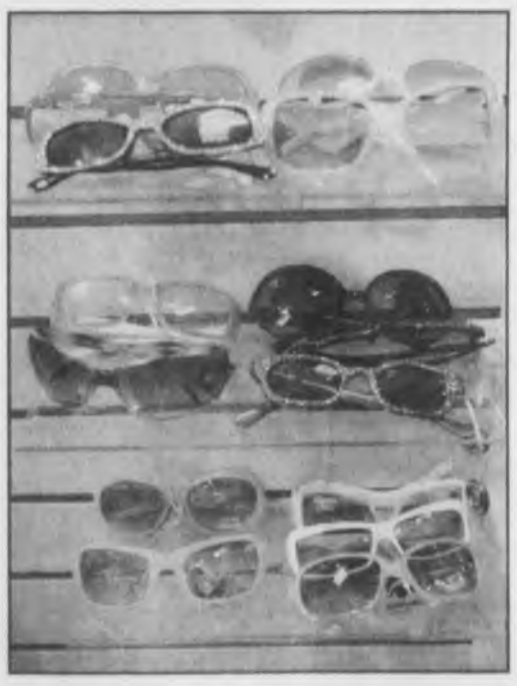
"Earrings are one accessory that can pull an outfit together," Pavlish said.

A tried and true accessory for many guys is a favorite hat. From the classic baseball to rugged cowboy varieties, hats have stood the test of time.



"Whether it's 12 degrees or 80 degrees outside, I always wear a beanie," Marc Mason, freshman in business, said.

Accessories are available at many locations in a variety of price ranges. Those on a tight budget can find the latest accessories priced between $10-30 at stores in the Manhattan Town Center. Those in search of more luxurious items should check out www.bluefly.com, where brand name accessories are available at deeply discounted prices.

"Take the time to add a few accessories," Beverlin said. "It makes an outfit look more polished and put-together."

Excuses for forgotten Valentine's, manly pastimes

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: I somehow forgot to get my girlfriend something for Valentine's Day. I have apologized until I was blue in the face, but she is still mad at me. What can I do?

A: Everyone who knows me knows that I'm probably going to write something about how Valentine's Day is stupid. Well, that's true, Valentine's Day is stupid.

But it's not stupid because you have to express your love to someone. It's stupid because if you do love someone, you should make sure they know that you love them every day of your life, not just one day a year.

But the fact is that Valentine's Day exists, and you have to do something for your girlfriend or boyfriend and there's no use bitching about it.

Now, if you do forget to get her something, the first thing you must do is find an excuse. I'm assuming that you told your girlfriend that you forgot, which is the biggest mistake you could have made.

The best excuse to use is to tell her that you ordered her something online and that it hasn't arrived yet. This will give you at least two or three days to find something.

Since your girlfriend already knows that you forgot to get her something, you're kind of screwed. You're pretty much going to have to do something much more elaborate than you would have had to do had you not forgotten.

Whatever you decide to do, make sure you do it when some of her friends are around. The main reason is that she can't be rude to you when her friends see you do something nice for her.

The other reason is that it will make it much easier for her to make sure that all her friends know what you've done. Girls like telling other girls about romantic things they've received even more than they enjoy getting them.

If my advice doesn't help and your girlfriend is still mad at you, I have some good Web sites that I can recommend to keep you occupied while she is giving you the cold shoulder.

Q: My boyfriend farts constantly. He thinks it's the funniest thing in the world. Is this normal? How can I get him to stop?

A: First of all, farting is the funniest thing in the world. At one of my friend's apartment, it is a constant battle to see who can fart the loudest and closest to a roommate's face or head (the closer, the better). There is no safe ground.

And God help the poor bastard that falls asleep on the couch. The more people that are around, the funnier the fart becomes.

Points are given for artistic poses or acrobatic moves such as dive rolls, jump farts and scissor kicks. Being farted on is considered the ultimate insult. This has lead to a general sense of paranoia in the apartment complex.

But, you must be careful because there are dangers involved. Fart attacks are noted, and enemies and alliances are formed. Nothing is ever forgotten. I have also known at least three people who have crapped in their pants while trying to display their rectal fortitude.

There are generally no rules of engagement, but women and children are usually spared. Usually.

I can't fully describe why farting is so funny or why it is funnier in public places.

All I can say is that the more inappropriate the location, the funnier the fart becomes (try it out in class today).

But what is most important is that farts are only funny if you are in the presence of others who think farting is funny. There is a time and place for everything. So stop farting around your girlfriends if they aren't laughing.

K-STATE CELEBRITIES

Rawson

Name: Tom Rawson

Title: Vice president of administration and finance.

How many years at K-State: I have been at K-State for almost 15 years.

Favorite leisure activity: During the past few years, I have become very interested in digital photography. I enjoy taking pictures of wildlife, birds, mountain scenes and grandchildren.

Three adjectives that describe you: Responsive, analytical and approachable.

Describe an ideal night for you: Enjoying dinner with my wife, watching a little television and working on some digital photographs.

Favorite aspect of K-State: The friendliness of the K-State community and the work ethic of our faculty, staff and students.

If you could change something about K-State, what would it be? K-State really needs more funding to sustain quality. Faculty and staff salaries are low, we have very little funding for equipment and supplies, and many of out facilities need significant upgrades. The students have stepped up to the plate by paying higher tuition; now, we must get more funding from the state and other resources.

Most embarrassing moment in college? When I was an undergraduate student at K-State, I almost burned down Willard Hall while conducting an experiment in the organic chemistry lab. No real damage, but embarrassing nonetheless.

If you could have lunch with anyone, who would it be? My wife and family

If you could drive any car, what would it be? SUV

What is something that most students don't know about you: My family is K-State through and through. My parents, my wife and our two children all attended K-State, and I have three degrees from K-State.

Forgotten man now remembered

Previous contributions shape future path of the university

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

He had the shortest term of any K-State president, but made a number of drastic changes that pushed the university into the new century.

However, many people don't remember him.

A special presentation titled "The Forgotten Man: Kansas State Agricultural College President Thomas E. Will, 1897-1899" will be given today for the Founders' Day celebration in the Purple Pride Room in the K-State Alumni Center at 3:30 p.m. today.

The program will be given by Cindy Harris, collections processor for university archives, and will include history on Will, a trivia quiz on past K-State presidents, door prizes and refreshments.

"It's a collective memory of Thomas Will and how people look at him," Harris said.

Will was responsible for setting up the four main colleges at K-State – Agriculture, Engineering, General and Household Studies – that would eventually become the eight colleges the university has today.

Will also made a major contribution to K-State by bringing engineering into the curriculum.

"People didn't believe that we would have an engineering school," Harris said.

"It was going to be up in Lawrence."

Also during his term, Will helped bring a dairy school to K-State after the school's herd of cows was infected with tuberculosis.

Despite his contributions, Will was called progressive for his time.

His theories and ideas did not always line up with those of the Kansas Board of Regents, whose members were newly hired from an increasing influential political party in Kansas.

After a short two-year term, Will and about 24 faculty and staff were fired due to the shift in politics of the state.

While several of the faculty were hired back, Will did not return to his position as president, making a formal resignation in 1898.

When Will was replaced by Ernest Nichols, the new president said that politics would not be discussed on campus.

Will's accomplishments were shoved beneath the covers of diplomacy, along with his memory, Harris said.

"There really is no memory of Thomas Will," Harris said. "And he is still not recognized."

In spite of his achievements, no official or proper tribute has been given for this president.

Yet Will is only one in a long line of past presidents whose memories have been neglected.

Even Denison Hall, the namesake building for K-State's first president, Joseph Denison, has been recently torn down with no new plan of an equal tribute.

Programs for the forgotten Will help students, faculty and the university to recall the past and take initiative in the future, Anthony Crawford, special collections director and archivist, said.

"One way to preserve and promote is to do programs like these," he said.

"It's important to raise awareness of K-State University.

"It helps to instill pride in the university."

But as new students and faculty circulate in and out of the university, the founders of the school can easily be lost in the mix.

"My question is who is going to be the next forgotten president," Harris said.

BSU to attend conference at CU

By Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Black Student Union and United Black Voices will attend the 2005 Big 12 Conference at the University of Colorado at Boulder, this weekend.

REVOLUTION, the theme for the conference, stands for "Realize Education is Vital to Overcoming Limitations so U Take Initiative and Organize Now."

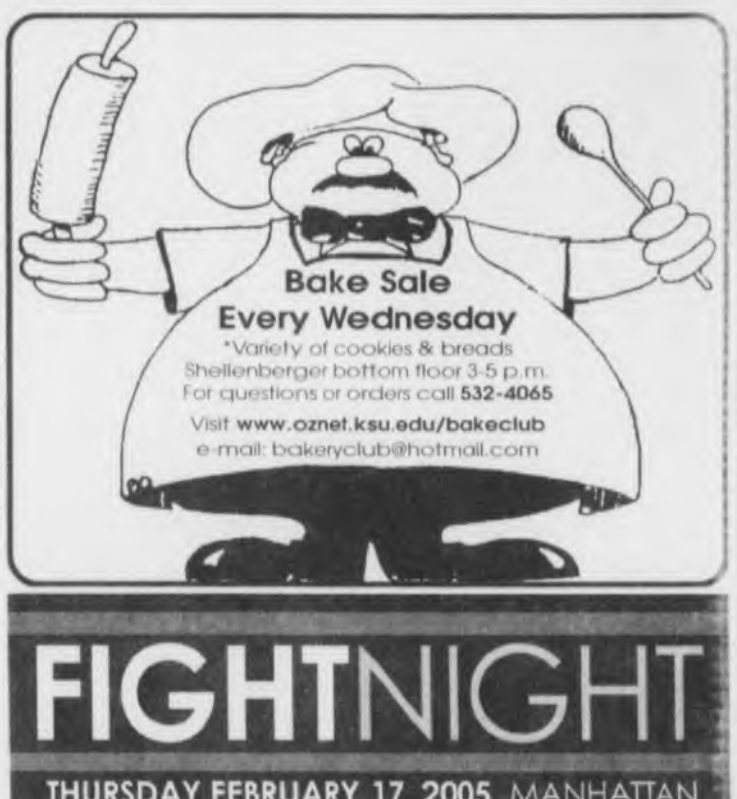
The four-day trip will consist of workshops, meetings, step shows and social activities.

Spencer hopes to bring ideas from each event back to K-State.

"I hope to gain new program ideas, unifying the African-American students on how to survive on a predominantly white campus," she said.

To attend, students had to be paid BSU members and be involved in 60 percent of the BSU activities. Both BSU and UBV received $1,000 from the Student Governing Association to help fund the trip, Spencer said.



"I hope to gain new program ideas, unifying the African-American students on how to survive on a predominantly white campus."
Kendra Spencer
BSU PRESIDENT

Corazon Ochanda, freshman in engineering, said she is attending the conference for a fun cultural experience.

"This is my freshman year, and I'm going to see what it's all about," she said.

REDEPLOYMENT | Families reunited Tuesday

Parent said Erik adjusts well to his father being gone, because he's used to it. This was his second time in Iraq, and he's been to South Korea for a year, as well.

"He hasn't been home for a complete year since we've been married," she said.

Parent and Teddi Reynolds said although they didn't know when their husbands would be home, they would still keep track.

"You kind of just count down and look, 'well it's been 12 months,'" Parent said.

Ryan Reynolds said he was thinking about seeing Teddi again on his trip back from Iraq.

He said he could picture seeing her when he was in formation at the ceremony when he was coming home. As he pictured, Ryan said he could see her at the ceremony.

"She was standing right, in front of me," he said.

A strong marriage is needed while married to someone in active duty, Shannon Hill said. She's been married to her husband, Chief Warrant Officer 2 William Hill III, for 11 years.

Shannon Hill and her daughter Madison, 9, were waiting for William with balloons.

Hill said her husband had been to Korea before, but this was his first time in Iraq.

"He could go to Korea any day," Hill said. "Nothing happens in Korea. People get shot in Iraq."

Because of the more dangerous situation in Iraq, Hill said she couldn't watch news about the war.

"It's scary, especially when you hear an aircraft goes down," she said. "You're just waiting for that phone call."

He's been raising their two boys, Justin, 6, and Christian, 10.

"It's still unique for them to be at home with dad," he said. "Their mom's got that nurturing touch."

Mark said the kids missed her, but they adjusted well.

"They know she's going over there for a good cause," he said.

There was one event in the kids' lives that Cara didn't want to miss, but did, Mark said. That was when Justin lost his first tooth.

"She was hoping it wouldn't fall out until she got home," he said.

Cara said she was waiting to get home to her family.

"The hardest thing about the whole deployment is being away from my family," she said. "Other than that, it's easy."

VACCINE
Meningitis shot now effective for 8 years

"When they come in for their tetanus booster I tell the parents about the meningitis vaccine as well," Shaver said.

According to Reppert, one in six freshmen in the residence halls gets meningitis.

"While this disease is very deadly, it's also very rare," Reppert said.

Reppert said that out of the people who get meningitis, 90 percent live and 10 percent die, while 10 percent of the survivors will have permanent damage.

Shaver said some universities nationwide have started a new campaign that will require students to get the Menactra vaccine.

Reppert said that the last case of meningitis at K-State was nine years ago, and the number of people getting the vaccination has not necessarily increased since a then.

"When we get another case of meningitis, it's then when we will be giving more meningitis shots," Reppert said.

"We play games and there's skits to make us laugh and it's kind of like a youth group-like thing," she said. "It's just a lot of fun."

Roberson said she has learned a lot from Short.

"She answers questions that we have and we do a lot of fun things that make it not like church," she said.

Throughout the year, Short helps organize programs for WyldLife. These activities included bowling this month, a movie in March and Grimetime to end the semester.

Short said during Grimetime the students have mud-fights and throw toilet paper and eggs, all in the name of Jesus Christ.

"Grimetime helps the leaders establish relationships with kids," Short said. "It shows what Christ's love is."

Each year of WyldLife is geared toward a WyldLife camp, which will be at a five-star resort in Minnesota this August.

The camp is what Short calls "controlled chaos," with hundreds of middle school students doing activities and hearing the gospel.

Brady Sorensen, sophomore in business administration, said he became a WyldLife leader because he wants to minister to youth.

"I really love junior highers, and I feel called to minister," he said.

Sorensen said being around the youth has helped him realize that things are not as bad as they seem.

Some students involved in WyldLife also participate in Bible studies led by some of the WyldLife leaders.

"I don't really go to many meetings," Mackenzie White, a student involved in WyldLife, said. "I only go to a few meetings, but I have a Bible study with Jancis."

Short said WyldLife is currently looking for volunteers. Interested students can contact Short or Feather and join the Leadership Training Club.

"Being a leader is a blast," Short said. "It is truly a life-changing experience."

NFL | Professional football players return, spend off-time in Manhattan

living together in their Founders Hill apartment with good friend and current K-State student senior Brent Bloomer.

"I don't have a bed," Lilja said. "I sleep on an inflatable air mattress."

While many are shocked to hear of Leckey and Lilja's return to Manhattan, Brady Lilja, Ryan Lilja's older brother, is not.

"They aren't spoiled NFL brats just yet," Brady Lilja said. "And Nick's lived at our house with us in Kansas City, too. In fact, he's even been there before when we weren't."

"They're both like girls – they share clothes, music," Brady Lilja said. "But I guess they get away from each other when they're with their girlfriends."

However, the two don't seem to be irritated with one another.

Leckey, who Ryan Lilja refers to as "Caveman," is the main reason he's in Manhattan.

"I wouldn't be down here if it wasn't for Nick," Ryan Lilja said. "It reminds me of being back in the day. He's like a brother to me."

Leckey said he shares the same sentiment towards Ryan Lilja.

"It's been fun spending time with Ryan," Leckey said. "We just watch movies and frequent Pat's and So Long once in a while."

"It's just great because Nick and I are at the same stage in our lives, doing the same thing," Ryan Lilja said. "And we like the same things – we love to joke around. Maybe a little too much."

Senior leads team with high honors

Mahoney gives credit to teammates for coming close to assist record

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For K-State seniors Kendra Wecker and Laurie Koehn, fellow senior Megan Mahoney has been their best friend the past four years.

Since she arrived at K-State in 2001, Mahoney has dished out 557 assists, just six shy of the K-State record of 562, set by Mary Jo Miller in 1992.

With Wecker on pace to break the Big 12 scoring record and Koehn ranking in the top five in 3-pointers made in the history of the NCAA, both players say without Mahoney, they wouldn't be where they are today.

"I feel very, very lucky to have had the chance to play with her the past four years and be on the same team as her," Koehn said.

"Her game, a lot of times, she looks to pass before she'll look to shoot. She's one of those players that makes everyone around her so much better."

Wecker said having Mahoney on the floor has made the game easier to play.

"When she's on the court, it's a lot easier for me, I know that much," Wecker said. "She passes the ball great and she gets people in great position to score. She has the ball and there's a little bit of easiness."

During her career, Mahoney has handed off a career-high 12 assists in three different games. This season, she has gone for seven assists three times.

She is the only Wildcat ever to have three-straight seasons with more than 150 assists, and she is 25 shy of having four-straight seasons with more than 100 assists.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN
Megan Mahoney is guarded by the University of Oklahoma's Leah Rush during Sunday's game in Norman, Okla. The Wildcats take on Texas tonight at Bramlage Coliseum.

Mahoney said all of her assists were the result of what her teammates did, and that if she breaks the record, she owes it more to the team.

"I think that's a record where a lot of it has to do with your teammates making shots and getting open," Mahoney said of possibly breaking K-State's assist record.

"I would have to attribute that individual record to a team effort."

But for all the giving Mahoney has done, her biggest contributions came earlier this year when she was asked to fill a slightly different role.

When Wecker, K-State's leading scorer this season, went down with an ankle injury Dec. 3 against New Hampshire and missed the next three games, it was Mahoney who stepped up and filled the void left by the All-American.

In Wecker's absence, Mahoney led K-State in scoring against Liberty, UMKC and Alabama, with totals of 18, 15 and 22 points, respectively.

"When Kendra went down, it became very important for our basketball team for (Mahoney) to be more assertive as a scorer – to look to get shots," head coach Deb Patterson said.

"Regardless of where you put her, Megan has a good ability to adapt and has a lot of weapons in her repertoire and almost always finds a way to utilize whatever that game needs or whatever her team needs during any given point in time."

Mahoney said she did what she felt the team needed her to do at the time.

"I think that was a stretch where I was playing the three or the four and I became a little bit more aggressive because there was a lot of point production that we lost," Mahoney said.

Mahoney said it was Hammon's passion for the game and determination that made her look up to the future WNBA star.

"I've always been a big fan of Becky Hammon," Mahoney said. "She's a 5-foot-6-inch little point guard, and she wasn't highly recruited, and she made a name for herself at Colorado State and made it in the WNBA.

"I just think she's had to work so hard to get where she's at and I just like the fire that she has for the game."

To hear Mahoney's teammates talk, one might confuse the two.

"She's just so smart out on the court and really able to help everyone play to their strengths," Koehn said. "She really is smart out there and is able to do so many things and affect the game in so many ways."

With the Wildcats still in the hunt for a regular season Big 12 championship, it will be players like Mahoney on whom the Wildcats call to provide an added boost down the final stretch of conference games.

As time runs out on her career as a Wildcat, Mahoney said she tries not to think about the end.

"It's kind of crazy that it's coming to an end," she said. "I don't think we'll really realize it until it's over. We're just trying to make the most of it now."

Patterson said when it is all over, Mahoney will most likely be remembered for her unselfish play, making her one of the greats.

"She's just a really special player with respect to her willingness to give the ball whenever, wherever," Patterson said.

Defense a priority for game against Texas

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The road to a second straight Big 12 title has become a little harder for No. 18 K-State.

After a devastating road loss to a struggling Oklahoma team, K-State women's basketball has No. 13 Texas coming to town at 7 tonight.

The Longhorns (15-7, 8-3) are fresh off a 21-point blowout win over rival Texas Tech, and they are now in a four-way tie with K-State for second place in the conference, along with Iowa State and Texas Tech.

With only a handful of games left in the season, the Texas game has become a must-win for the Wildcats (17-5, 8-3) if they want any chance at making a run for the Big 12 crown.

Head coach Deb Patterson said K-State is going to have to step up its defense in the post and on the perimeter if it wants to knock off Texas.

"I think Texas plays different, but they're a lot like Oklahoma in that they bring a lot of weapons to the floor," Patterson said.

"They can penetrate the ball extremely well at all of their perimeter positions, and they bring the ability to hit the three. They bring the fabulous post game with Tiffany Jackson and Mercedes Williams, and so it's all about the versatility that they bring. They've got a significantly stronger post game than Oklahoma brought to the floor, but they play a little bit different than Oklahoma."

Senior forward Brie Madden said the post will be an issue now more than ever for the Wildcats, and the team understands the importance of an inside presence.

"Every day we work hard in the post, and the Big 12 is full of great posts, so you've got to be ready to bring it every day," Madden said. "When you don't bring it, you don't have a very good chance of winning."

K-State will also focus on trying to find another scoring threat from its guards on offense.

Against Oklahoma, senior forward Kendra Wecker accounted for 29 of K-State's 61 points.

Patterson said Texas will no doubt be keying in on Wecker, and someone will have to step up and take the pressure off her.

"A high priority any time we take the floor is ball distribution," Patterson said.

"We had next to none of that in the Oklahoma game, and you can see that we're not a very good basketball team when that happens. It is way out of our character; we're not great one-on-one players, so I think when you look at a game where we finish with six assists, that mentally and in terms of our execution we weren't really playing Kansas State basketball."

Wecker said playing better defense will be a priority for K-State.

"They(Texas) have a great perimeter as well as Oklahoma," Wecker said. "There are a lot of areas we're going to have to defend and we need to bring a focus and a concentration and an attitude about defending all five spots on the floor."

K-State loses 5th straight

Harris scores team-high 16 points in loss

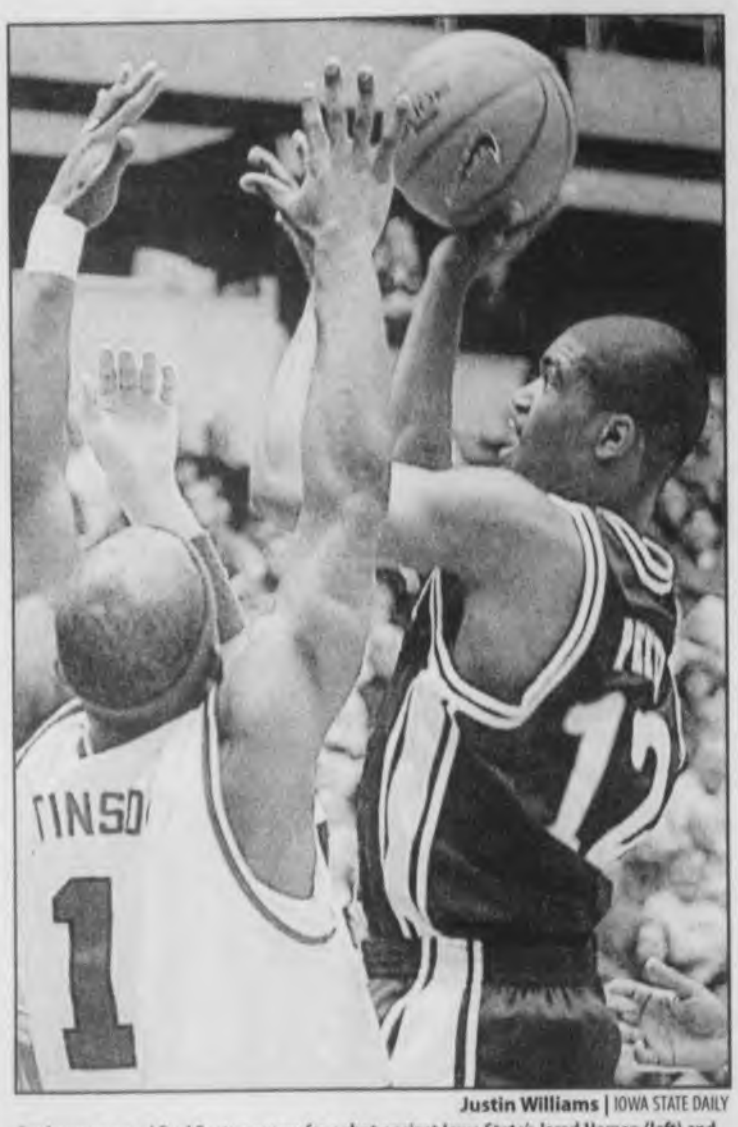
By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Wildcats were the latest victim of the Big 12 Conference's hottest team, with a 57-42 loss to the Iowa State Cyclones Tuesday night.

The Cyclones (14-8, 6-5), winners of six straight, got off to a quick start against the Wildcats (13-9, 3-8), and K-State couldn't find any rhythm on offense.

"We attempted to win from 22 to 23 feet, and we are not going to win doing that," coach Jim Wooldridge said during his postgame interview, broadcast on the Mid America Sports Network.

In the first half, it was all Iowa State as freshmen Tasheed Carr and Rahshon Clark combined for 19 points, while K-State struggled, shooting just 38 percent from the floor.



"They smelled blood and went after it," Wooldridge said after the game. "We didn't play very aggressive on defense, and they found shots."

In the second half, K-State tightened up on defense, holding Iowa State to 19 points on 7-of-26 shooting, but were unable to chip away at the double-digit deficit.

Despite shooting 38 percent in the second half as a team, senior forward Jeremiah Massey and sophomore guard Lance Harris did their best to keep the Wildcats in the game.

Massey scored eight of his 14 points after halftime, while Harris scored 11 of his team-high 16 points and shot 2-of-3 from beyond the three-point line in the second half.

K-State's 42 points for the game were the lowest output since a 63-41 loss against Texas, Jan. 10, 2001. The loss is also the fifth straight for K-State.

Hayden 2nd Wildcat to leave team this year

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the second time this season, a K-State basketball player has left the team.

On Saturday, coach Jim Wooldridge announced junior forward Marques Hayden will not play for the Wildcats the rest of the season.

"It basically is a mutual decision and it's over," Wooldridge said. "It needs to be over, and we wish him the absolute best, but we've go to be concerned with guys on our team, and what's good for Marques and what's good for the program and what's good for the kids in the program, and it needed to come to an end, and that's what happened."

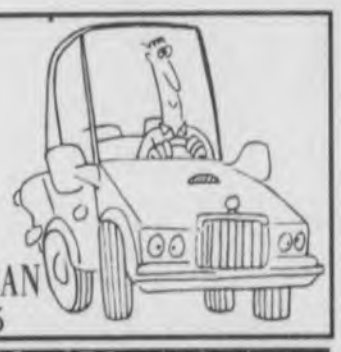
Hayden, a native of Putnam City, Okla., had not played since a 63-51 win against Iowa State on Jan. 2. He sat out the last four games due to persistent migraine headaches.

The 6-foot-7 junior also had his differences with Wooldridge throughout his three-year career, including this season. Hayden was suspended for a game after remarks he made to the media about his role on the team.

In 15 games this season, Hayden averaged 6.8 points per game on 43 percent shooting and 5.3 rebounds per game.

Wooldridge said Hayden will not return for this season, but the possibility of him returning was an option.



Despite the differences with his head coach, Hayden was a fixture on the court for the Wildcats, playing in all 28 games last season and playing in all 30 games as a freshman. Throughout his career, Hayden averaged 7.3 points per game on 49 percent shooting.

Wooldridge said Hayden is still enrolled in classes and that should be his focus for the remainder of the season.

"I think right now, it's over, it's done, he's in school, he needs to do well in school, he needs to be productive as a student and a person, and then we go from there," Wooldridge said.

Peete's play improves

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

No one said it was easy to adjust to basketball in the Big 12 Conference, but more than halfway through the conference season, sophomore guard Fred Peete thinks he's got it down.

Peete came into Tuesday night's game at Iowa State on the heels of scoring a career-high 28 points in Saturday's overtime loss to Texas. The transfer from Northeastern Oklahoma A&M hit seven 3-pointers in the game, the most by any Wildcat since Gilson DeJesus in 2002.

"I've found a comfort zone, my shot has started falling," Peete said. "Basically, I'm realizing how they (Big 12 players) are starting to play me. They are basically looking for me to penetrate more often, and that's opened me up to get wide-open shots. When I penetrate, I can distribute the ball and get to the basket."

Peete must have figured something out.

Not only did Peete hit his career-high on Saturday, he also went for 20 points and six 3-pointers the previous game in a home loss to Kansas. Those two performances caught the eye of the Big 12, as the conference named Peete its Rookie of the Week.

Peete's play was a bright spot for Coach Jim Wooldridge after a week that yielded two disappointing losses for the team.

"Well, he played great, he made a lot of plays out there, played with a lot of energy – you know, I couldn't be more proud of him," Wooldridge said after the Texas game. "He's a youngster that this week has really played with a sense of confidence and urgency, and he's coming on."

While Peete has been putting up big scoring numbers, he has also been very efficient in doing so.

Peete was a combined 15-of-29 from the field against Kansas and Texas and 13-of-23 on 3-pointers – good enough to bump his three-point shooting percentage up to 41 percent from 36 percent.

The Texas game still has people talking.

Spotting up often from several feet behind the arc and also showing the ability to drive, Peete was the Wildcats' only consistent offensive threat throughout the contest.

Wooldridge said he was impressed by Peete's overall play during the game.

"I don't think there is any doubt that he kept us going offensively and he made some plays defensively, and his line is just outstanding," Wooldridge said. "He went to the free-throw line a few times and got some rebounds and had one turnover."

Peete's play was able to loosen the defense on other Wildcats and create open shots.

"Fred was starting to knock down shots so they kind of tightened up on Fred; we needed some other players to step up," said sophomore guard Lance Harris, who had 13 points against Texas. "I was just trying to help and trying to give us some energy off the bench."

Peete said when Harris and senior forward Jeremiah Massey, who had 14 points, found more openings, the shots came back full circle.

"Jeremiah's a ball-player," Peete said. "As the ballgame went on, he found his groove and got the free-throw line more often. We were getting him the ball, we were working off Jeremiah, and that enabled me to find myself open."

Now establishing himself as one of the best young guards in the Big 12, Peete's shoulders will not be getting any lighter as the season progresses.

The Wildcats will likely count on Peete to continue his hot shooting to break the funk the team had heading into Tuesday night's contest against the Cyclones.

But if his comments after the Texas game were any sign, don't expect a me-first attitude from Peete, as he tries to push K-State towards victory.

"I never figured it was ever a one-man show," Peete said. "It was a team thing. The only way I was getting open and able to shoot the ball so well was because my team was screening for me, and I moved without the ball.

Wildcat defense struggles

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There was not much going wrong during the K-State women's basketball team's recent seven-game winning streak.

The Wildcats earned a big win on the road over Texas Tech, avenged an earlier season loss to Iowa State and found themselves atop the Big 12 Conference standings.

However, the seventh straight win came against lowly Colorado on the road, and it was tougher than expected.

Called "hockey goons" by a columnist from Iowa for their aggressive play on defense after their win over Iowa State, the Wildcats followed up that performance the next game by giving up 70 points to the Buffaloes.

It was the first time since their conference opening loss that they had given up 70 points or more, and only the third time all season.

"Defensively, I don't think we're bringing that attitude and that mindset of just being aggressive," senior Kendra Wecker said. "Knowing personnel, what each individual player on the other team brings to the floor. It's just a combination of different things that, individually, I don't think we're being accountable for and that, in turn, leads to some breakdowns as a team."

Since the Jan. 29 game at Colorado, the Wildcats are 2-2 with both losses on the road.

In its last game, K-State gave up 77 points to Oklahoma, the third time in the last four games it has allowed more than 70 points in a game.

K-State was near the top of the Big 12, only allowing 60 points per game in conference play.

"I think it's probably our intensity out there on both ends of the floor, offensively and defensively," senior Megan Mahoney said. "You can't have segments when you play well. You need to string together a 40-minute game that's intense, and you need to stay focused.

"I think those games (the last four), we have struggled a bit, especially on the defensive end, but I think with Colorado or Oklahoma State, we were able to gut those out and get wins."

During its recent four-game stretch, K-State has allowed three or more players to score in double figures in three of the games.

Coach Deb Patterson said defense has been an issue in the last four games, but there are other problems contributing to the Wildcats' struggles.

"Defensively, we've given up a lot of extra possessions to our opponents with our turnovers," Patterson said.

"We haven't boarded the ball at the level we need to."

"I think in each of those games, we've given up too many threes, and those threes will jump on you pretty quick, and I think that's what we saw against Baylor, that's what we saw against Oklahoma and that's an area we have to bring a whole lot of attention to as we continue down the stretch."

K-State had 69 turnovers in the last four games, while it has forced its opponents into 54. The Wildcats are averaging nearly five more turnovers per game during the last four games.

"We've struggled somewhat the last four games, there's no denying that," senior Laurie Koehn said.

"We got distracted in some way or another and I think it's just a matter of regaining that focus. We can start establishing ourselves and it starts on Wednesday against Texas.

"I hope after two losses in the last four games, hopefully everyone realizes how important it is for us to be focused and not let distractions come in."

Give Wooldridge more time to excel at K-State

MATT GIRARD

Even before the Wildcats' fourth-straight loss against Texas Saturday, rumblings of Wooldridge's future at K-State have resurfaced.

Last season, in the fourth year of his original five-year contract, the eighth-winningest coach in Wildcat history faced the same questions as his team finished tied for ninth in the Big 12 Conference with no postseason play.

The athletic department responded by giving Wooldridge a two-year extension on his contract, in order to give him a chance to resurrect the Wildcat basketball program – which is happening.

In his fifth year as head coach, Wooldridge's team started off with a bang, winning 10 of their first 11 games, and they had people talking of a possible upset over rival Kansas.

Unfortunately, as we all watched last week, "The Streak" is still intact and Wooldridge remains winless against the Jayhawks. Of course, after losing his 10th-straight game to Kansas, the rumor-mill began churning about whether Wooldridge is the right man for the job, but one or two games each year can't determine the fate of a coach.

Especially when those one or two games are against a national powerhouse like Kansas.

Good basketball programs take time to produce. Wooldridge has the makings of one with players like sophomores Cartier Martin, Fred Peete, and Tyler Hughes, and freshmen Clent Stewart and Curtis Allen.

The 49-year-old coach also landed Sidike Sidibe from France, a seven-footer who is considered to be one of the top post players in Europe.

Some may argue that having two highly-touted recruits in Dez Willingham and Marques Hayden leave the team in one season is a sign of a bad coach, but, on the other hand, those two spots are now open for players who are excited about the program and want to make a difference.

I'm not saying there shouldn't be expectations, but the expectations need to be reasonable.

Just look at the Wildcat's conference.

There are five teams from the Big 12 ranked in the Associated Press Top 25 poll, and the top five teams in the league standings have 16 or more wins. Even the bottom half of the league is competitive, with teams like Iowa State, Texas A&M and Colorado being able to beat any team on any given night.

Another sign Wooldridge has his players and K-State moving in the right direction is the Wildcats' resiliency. Double-digit deficits are nothing to this team.

Down 17 points in the second half against Kansas last Wednesday, K-State battled back to within four points before losing by nine. On Saturday, the "Cardiac Cats" did it again against Texas by coming back from a 14-point deficit to tie the game and send it into overtime, before losing by three.

Athletic Director Tim Weiser has said Wooldridge's future is not an issue at the moment and it shouldn't be.

We should just let Wooly do his job and reap the benefits when it pays off.

Bears, Cyclones, Wildcats, Longhorns in hunt for title

MICHAEL ASHFORD

The women's Big 12 Championship race is entering the final stretch, and with no fewer than five teams still in the hunt for the title, it looks like it will come down to the final week to determine the winner.

There is still a lot of basketball left to be played, so here's a breakdown of the teams that have a shot to win the championship.

THE FAVORITE:

No. 7 Baylor (19-3, 9-2)

Led by the inside presence of Sophia Young (17.9 ppg, 9.5 rpg) and Steffanie Blackmon (15.4 ppg, 8.3 rpg), the Bears look poised to take the regular season title if they can finish out the season strong.

Baylor has a fairly easy schedule to close out the season, as only two of its remaining five opponents have winning records. Those two games are against No. 19 Iowa State and No. 15 Texas Tech, but both are home games for the Bears.

Providing Baylor doesn't choke, it will be the Big 12 regular season champions.

THE CONTENDERS:

No. 19 Iowa State (18-4, 8-3)

The Cyclones have the easiest remaining schedule, with four of their last five games at home against teams eight through 11 in the league standings.

A road trip to Baylor looks like it will be a loss for Iowa State, a team coming off a disastrous 88-59 road loss at Nebraska.

However, if Baylor trips up at any time, the Cyclones will be poised to at least tie for first with a win in Waco, Texas.

No. 18 K-State (17-5, 8-3)

The Wildcats still have some huge games on the schedule, starting with tonight's contest against the Texas Longhorns and next Wednesday's matchup against Nebraska in Lincoln, Neb.

However, K-State gets Texas at home in Bramlage Coliseum, where the Wildcats have never lost to the Longhorns in Big 12 play.

All-American Kendra Wecker is the league's leading scorer (20.6 ppg) and rebounder (9.5 rpg), and the Wildcats will need her to keep up her high level of play if they want to win the conference.

The Wildcats will need some upsets to move up, but if they can finish the season undefeated, there is a possibility they could claim at least a share of their second-straight Big 12 Championship.

No. 13 Texas (15-7, 8-3)

However, there are some chinks in Texas' armor.

Guard Nina Norman and All-America forward Tiffany Jackson are hurting, as both players suffered injuries within the last week.

This is not good for Texas, as it faces No. 18 K-State tonight in a game that is crucial for both teams' hopes of a Championship.

If both players get healthy, Texas could creep up on Baylor at the top. If not, the Longhorns will fall fast.

THE LONGSHOT:

No. 15 Texas Tech (17-5, 8-3)

The Lady Raiders have had a tough go of it lately. The team has lost two of its last three games, including a 64-43 whipping at the hands of Texas.

With road games against Oklahoma, who beat K-State on Sunday, and Baylor, it will be tough for Texas Tech to move up in the standings unless it can pull off some huge wins and couple those with upsets of other teams.

Second-hand smoke shown to be equally harmful to smokers, non-smokers

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even though it is widely known that smoking causes cancer, it does not stop many people.

Dr. Richard Baybutt, associate professor in human nutrition, said of the 4,000 different components in smoke, there are at least 20 known to cause cancer.

However, according to Baybutt, who studies smoking and cancer at the Center for Cancer Research at K-State, it is not the mainstream smoke from inhaling that is more harmful – it is the sidestream smoke that comes off the flame.

"The filter helps to remove some of the tar and other components," Baybutt said. "The components get trapped, so they are not as reactive."

Sidestream smoke, also known as second-hand smoke, affects not only smokers, but non-smokers, as well.

According to the National Cancer Institute, second-hand smokers absorb nicotine and other compounds, just as smokers do. As the second-hand smoke increases, so do the harmful effects on the body.

Xue holds a pack of cigarettes used for the smoking chamber study. The research from the study resulted in the rats getting cancer by inhaling second hand smoke in the chamber.

Some health effects associated with second-hand smoke include lung cancer, nasal sinus cancer, chronic respiratory systems in children, Sudden Infant Death Syndrome and heart disease mortality, among others.

Studies have recently shown that smoke also causes Vitamin-A deficiencies, which can lead to emphysema. Research has shown, Baybutt said, that Vitamin A protects against emphysema and possibly cancer.

However, when experiments were conducted to observe an increase in Vitamin A, the increase could lead to osteoporosis, Baybutt said.

Seemingly a lose-lose situation.

Lyssa Goebel, a smoker and junior in early childhood education, said the current research on smoking and cancer is scary. Nonetheless, it has not stopped her from smoking.

"Now that it's our parents and grandparents dying from smoking, it has become more of a reality," Goebel said. "Every time I buy a pack and read the warning label, I kind of joke around about it, but it's serious."

Serious enough that in Lawrence, Kan., smoking has been banned from all public places, including all bars in restaurants.

Louise's Downtown, a bar in Lawrence, was forced to adhere to the ban enacted roughly a year ago. Ebony Simon, a bartender at Louise's, said while some bars have seen business decline, Louise's has not.

"We haven't personally seen business go down," Simon said. "However, we built an outdoor two-floor patio for smokers."

In Manhattan, Rusty's Next Door stands alone as the only smoke-free environment.

Seminar to teach terrorist ID tactics

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Community policing is taking a new form, this time recognizing a terrorist.

A community session, sponsored by the Regional Community Policing Training Institute, is sponsoring a basics of counterterrorism seminar at 6 p.m. today in Edwards 108.

The program was geared toward law enforcement officials at its inception, but the emphasis has moved to community policing, Andra Bannister, head of the institute, said.

"We're anticipating lots of walk-ins, which are welcome," Bannister.

"There is no training cost and everyone is welcome."

Bannister said the session will include specifics on how to identify suspicious activities, what to report to police and lay the foundation for terrorism.

If you go
Basics of counterterrorism seminar
When: 6 tonight
Where: Edwards 108
How much: Free

Registration begins at 5:15 p.m.

"We'll talk about all sorts of terrorist groups," Bannister said.

"The international and national terrorists, the right-winged, the left-winged, methods and motives and suicide attacks."

The institute is having a training program all day today in Manhattan, which is why K-State was a chosen site.

Wednesday night, a session was on the Wichita State University campus, which is home to the institute.

"We're piloting the program," Bannister said.

"We are responsible for Kansas and Nebraska, and we're hoping this is going to pose as a tool to everyone."

Jury chosen in professor's murder trial

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jury selection for the trial of K-State English Professor Thomas E. Murray concluded late Wednesday morning.

According to the Lawrence Journal-World, five men and 10 women were selected as eligible jurors after filling out questionnaires and completing extensive questioning that began Monday.

Three of these candidates will be chosen as alternates before testimony begins.

Murray has been charged with one count of premeditated, first-degree murder in the stabbing death of his ex-wife, Carmin Ross.

The trial will begin today and is expected to last between four to six weeks.

Murray is on paid leave from K-State.

Study shows obesity, hormone changes linked to cancer

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In a world where seemingly everything causes cancer, new cancer-causing agents are constantly being revealed.

While everyone enjoys a Big Mac nor Coney cheese dog from time to time, Dr. George Wang, assistant professor in human nutrition, said studies concerning obesity show that weight gain increases one's risk of cancer.

In fact, according to the National Cancer Institute, obesity and physical inactivity may account for 25 to 30 percent of several major cancers.

Additionally, results from the 1999-2000 National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey showed an estimated 64 percent of adults are either overweight or obese.

"Research can't explain exactly why obesity has a high cancer cause yet, but that is what we are trying to figure out," Wang said.

However, studies at the Cancer Research Center at K-State have shown that a change in hormones, particularly Insulin Growth Factor-1 (IGF-1) and Leptin, are directly linked to cancer.

Wang said research suggests over-cooked meat is one element causing an oxidation that produces fatty acids that are not normally produced by the body. It is these fatty acids that are cancer causing.

Frying, boiling and barbecuing can generally produce over-cooked meat.

"Leptin is secreted by fatty tissue, and if your body is overweight, you have more tissue," Dr. Wang said. "This results in more Leptin being produced."

IGF-1 is threatening because, when it is stimulated, causing change in the hormone, a certain passage way is activated where IGF-1 and other hormones are stored. As these passageways become more active, cancer risk increases in conjunction with increased activity.

Therefore Wang, as well as other researchers, is trying to discover why this change in hormones causes cancer and what preventative action can be taken to avoid obesity and cancer.

Coats are out; students pick hoodies, fleece pullovers

By Abby Brownback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They're more comfortable and less bulky, students said, but are they enough to ward off winter's low temperatures?

This winter, hooded sweatshirts and fleece jackets have replaced coats as students' protection from the cold.

"I own a coat; I just wear my hoodie more," said Brad Anderson, freshman in secondary education.

Hooded sweatshirts, or hoodies sweatshirts, as they are commonly called, have a number of advantages over coats, students said.

"A hoodie's better," said Britney Brucker, freshman in pre-nursing. "You don't get as hot. My mom tries to tell me to wear a coat. She was glad when I got a real winter coat this year."

Students say they often do not want to hassle with carrying or storing coats during classes or if the temperature increases throughout the day. Some cite laziness as a reason they don hoodies instead of coats.

"I don't like to carry a coat around when I'm done wearing it," Chris Furlong, freshman in athletic training, said.

Many students wear hoodies or fleeces advertising K-State, sports teams, clubs, sororities, fraternities or high schools. Sometimes these are required purchases, thus cost figures into the preference for hoodies over coats.

Hoodies generally range in price from $15 to $50. Students can purchase many K-State hoodies from Varney's Book Store for about $35.

Furlong, who sported a St. Thomas Aquinas hoodie, said he usually pays $20 to $30 for a hoodie.

Winter coats typically cost upwards of $100.

While hoodies and fleeces do not always keep students as warm, Dr. Jay Reppert, Lafene Health Center Medical Director, said being cold will not necessarily cause students to become ill.

"Getting cold doesn't predispose people to colds," Reppert said. "They probably aren't hurting themselves."

However, Reppert recommends that students get enough sleep and make sure not to place too much stress on their bodies.

"Just take good old care of yourself," he said.

Carol Kennedy, Lafene Director of Health Promotion, said students should compromise between wearing hoodies rather than coats. She said students should check the weather forecast in the morning and dress accordingly. She also said it would be a good idea for students to keep a coat in their cars in case the weather changes.

Reppert and Kennedy said there might be a correlation between America's expanding waistlines and the trend toward less winter protection.

"A person with more body fat might stay warmer in colder weather," Kennedy said. "There are some people who just tolerate coolness better."

But students don't seem to mind the winter conditions.

"I just try to walk fast to class so I don't get cold," said Andrea Macy, freshman in pre-nursing.

ABOVE: Hooded sweatshirts, also known as hoodies, have become a popular trend in the past few years. Hoodies come in a variety of different styles and colors for students to choice from.

LEFT: Hooded sweatshirts have been a new trend for students in the past few years. They are smaller than coats and easier to manage compared to a large winter coat.

Criminology professors use court cases to enhance learning

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Studies in criminal justice offer students a chance to evaluate crime cases in Kansas history.

Critical evaluation of such crimes and the motives behind them can help students understand various aspects of American culture, Sue Williams, associate professor of sociology and criminology, said.

One example is the case of Rodney King, whose fatal beating was instigated by police officers in 1991, Williams said.

"(Violence) can be used to demonstrate several theories of crime (such as) social disorganization, strain, subculture or cultural deviance, as well as social change, conflict, individual and structural level racism and discrimination, and the complex raced, classed and gendered workings of the criminal justice system," she said.

Other high profile cases, such as the O.J. Simpson trial, epitomize societal issues. Such proceedings foster awareness of problems like domestic violence and bring them to the public's attention, Williams said.

Students in Williams' classes also profile Kansas cases. Among them are the Carr murders, which took the lives of four former K-State students and left one seriously wounded and traumatized by the events she witnessed.

Another case Williams focuses on is that of Sabine Davidson of Junction City, who was recently convicted of second-degree murder in the killing of a young boy who was viciously attacked by Davidson's pet rottweilers. This is a landmark case because it's the first time anyone has been convicted because of the actions of a pet.

"Students, and all of us, relate much better to abstract concepts when we can apply it to real-life situations," Williams said. "Using local cases, events, and people makes the lesson even more salient, even personal. I firmly believe in the application of knowledge and case studies provide an excellent mechanism for making such principles come to life."

Ryan Spohn, assistant professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, said he focuses largely on white-collar crimes in the corrupt business world. The most current local case involves Westar Energy in Topeka, which is heading toward its second trial, Spohn said.

Roy Barnett, instructor of sociology, anthropology and social work, said he focuses more on the rights of criminals as well as the laws which bind police officers that protect society from police brutality.

By using court cases, Barnett said he can illustrate real-world situations.

"It's interesting to go back and see what the final ruling is, but also to get the background of what happened in the case," Barnett said.

One study presented in some criminology classes is the case of Richard Grissom, who was convicted in 1989 for the slaying of three Douglas County women, despite the absence of bodies. Kenneth Landwehr, homicide division of the Wichita Police Department, presents the case.

"He details the killing process, the capture, and conviction of Grissom and includes graphic photos," Williams said. "A profile of Grissom's background, as well as details of the victims, [he] provides rich material from which to evaluate the social process of multiple killing."

No mock trial programs are incorporated, but Williams, Barnett and Spohn encourage discussion and even debate on relevant topics. Williams also has students critique books on specific cases and has them make comparisons between such works and respected research of serial murders.

Williams also incorporates some in-depth and personal experimental methods into the study of the criminal psyche.

"I provide students the opportunity to correspond with inmates in state prison(s)," she said. "At the end of the semester, we tour the prison, and students are usually able to meet their writing partner in a face-to-face encounter. Some students have described this experience as life-altering."

TO THE POINT

Current events relevant to good education

Current events should be used in as many cases as possible to ensure that students are getting the best, most easily understandable education.

Instructors in criminology use court cases to illustrate the issues that are being discussed in class. Using local cases makes events more relevant to students, as it brings the issues closer to home.

Other courses, such as those in the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work, also use cases as a teaching mechanism to illustrate the course material.

These methods are helpful to students because they are more easily remembered than material out of a textbook. Using current events also makes the students realize the importance of the material as it is applied to real-life events.

Examples of topics that can be related to classroom topics include Westar Energy, the BTK killings, presidential elections, gay marriage, abortion and evolution, among many others.

It is important that all courses use this method by including current events in the news that pertain to the particular subject area. This not only educates students on the material, but it also keeps them updated with recent current events

K-State instructors should strive to give the best education to their students, which includes presenting material in the most interesting and relevant ways. Using events in the news that can directly apply to students, and may change their lives, is a good way to work to achieve this goal.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Monologues not an effective way to prevent objectification of women

GRANT REICHERT

Vagina! Vagina! Vagina!

Having said that so gratuitously, do you think A) women will feel empowered, B) violence toward women will dissipate or C) the Internet version of this column will get a lot of "Paris Hilton Video" and "Barbara Walters nude naked nudity pix" traffic?

According to the newest bit of activism-cum-holiday – V-Day – A and B are correct.

I don't know if it's incestuous to quote the newspaper I write for, but this portion from a Collegian article about V-Day supporters is too good to pass up:

"About 20 men and women gathered...displaying signs to the traffic such as 'No means no' and 'I love vaginas.'"

And they did so without a trace of irony. An even more hilarious passage comes later: "Their signs' messages included 'A rape occurs every 22 hours on a college campus' and 'Honk if you love vaginas.'"

Best...juxtaposition...ever.

Just so you know, if a person honks at that sign, you should probably avoid drinking anything that person offers you.

The purpose of the off-color signs wasn't to raise awareness about violence toward women, but rather to raise awareness for the raison d'etre of V-Day – "The Vagina Monologues."

I was going to go see it, but I realized this would be a conflict of interest. That is, it would conflict with my interest of not seeing the show, which was quite intense.

Instead, I read a few monologues on the Internet. It was just what I expected: a pathetically passé Gen-X attempt to be avant-garde, exhibiting the ironic "I'm-comfortable-with-my-body-in-a-self-conscious-sort-of-way" mindset so popular among snarky stand-up comediennes.

At first this shtick was shocking, but now it's descended past banal to arrive somewhere near the feet of Carrot Top. Yawn.

Maybe it's "empowering" to some, but I don't think using "vagina" either as a synechdoche for women or as an overarching metaphor for the feminine experience is an effective way of preventing the objectification of women.

And, considering the subversion of traditional values, do I detect a whiff of sinister leftist agenda? That, or else some teenagers broke into my stash again.

Illustrations by Amanda Dinkel | COLLEGIAN

My, uh, "traditional values" stash, that is.

The V-Day Web site urges people to vote the "Vagina Vote" on issues dealing with women. Fair enough, but is "insist[ing] the United States become a member of the International Criminal Court" really relevant?

The "Vagina Vote" even lapses into environmental activism, urging women to vote against the "rape" and "exploitation" of Mother Earth. This might be taking the sexual violence metaphor a tad too far, not to mention crassly exploiting it for political gain.

But while V-Day may have political undercurrents and a flawed delivery, at least the proceeds went to extremely worthy causes. And I think we can all agree that any man who lays a finger on an unwilling female should be forced through a meat-grinder and fed to chubby kids at a sweltering Alabama fat camp.

The point is that V-Day should be about pro-actively balancing out the violence equation between men and women. Jonas Hogg had a good point: we should hand out Glocks to girls at the Union so they can shoot up any randy frat boy that tries to get fresh with them.

Instead of being empowered by seminars, girls should enroll in "Billy Blanks' Tae Bo" self-defense series to learn the ancient art of killing rhythmically while simultaneously improving heart health.

That, or you could show your stance against sexual violence and the objectification of women by obsessively focusing on their sexual anatomy and buying an "I [heart] Vaginas" shirt.

I guess it's all a matter of whether you want to vote with your vagina or vote with your brain.

News media more concerned with ads than morals

AARON DUNCAN

In the 2002 film "Spider-Man," Spidey's uncle tells him, "With great power comes great responsibility." Of course he should have added, "unless you are part of the media, because then you get a free pass."

Last week I wrote a column criticizing the Collegian, and the response it received voiced the opinion I believe to be held by many members of the media, local and international. The Collegian, it was said, is not the "moral police," and a paper is beholden to its readers and not to morality.

Unfortunately, much of the media has missed the ethical boat. The Collegian did more than report a story; it specifically endorsed drinking games in the article and explained in detail how to participate in one. This was more than just reporting the facts. A story on meth clinics doesn't include a recipe for meth. The media does have moral obligations.

The media seem to want great power but refuse to accept responsibility.

I do not expect the media to be our moral police, but I do expect them to exercise discretion and restraint.

Today, members of the media care more about the interests of their advertisers than the interests of their readers. I am forced to wonder how it possibly can be in the best interests of the students of K-State to consume more alcohol and to do so in a dangerous fashion. Rather, it was in the Collegian's best interest. The article did not serve the best interest of our readers, but it possibly got more people to read the paper, in turn helping to sell more advertising.

Media outlets seem to care more about the bottom line than the ethical line they should not cross. The quest to get the story or to grab a reader's attention has resulted in the media's fall from grace.

There are numerous examples of the media's greed hurting credibility: Geraldo drawing the location of our troops in the dirt, Dan Rather failing to check the facts of a story about the president or even Stephen Glass and Jayson Blair making up sources and stories. A new Gallup poll found that reporters are among the five least-trusted professions in the country.

The impact of an irresponsible press cannot be underestimated. In the case of the Collegian article, a student may have gotten alcohol poisoning. Geraldo could have gotten our troops killed. Dan Rather could have unduly influenced the outcome of a presidential election.

One is forced to wonder: if Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein were to come forward in this day and age, would anyone believe them? Could the American public trust two reporters who refuse to name their major source?

"Spider-Man" had it right. Great power does come with great responsibility. In the past, the media has upheld its obligation. Today it seems like most of the media refuse to honor it.

Historically, the media have been recognized as the fourth estate, keeping watch of the government, business and society. Now it seems that the fourth estate has become just another business, and that has dire implications for all of us.

Art showcase displays variety of work

Graduate students participate in Studio Walk

By Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 15 graduate art students will open their studios to the public today.

On display in West Stadium will be a variety of art, including drawings, paintings, ceramics and sculptures.

"This is an opportunity for people to talk to the artist as they look at their work," Julie Gibbs, member of graduate students of visual arts, said.

Gibbs, Graduate student in ceramics, said the display is open from 5 to 7 p.m.

"Everybody is welcomed to come," she said.

This event is known as Studio Walk. Every third Thursday, artists display the projects they've been working on, Gibbs said.

This event is only the beginning of things to come, Teresa Johnson, president of GSOVA, said.

"We just started doing this last semester," Johnson said. "I am really proud of the students for putting this together."

Since GSOVA receives no funding for the event, Johnson said the entire undertaking is self-sufficient.

Gibbs said that the GSOVA is doing this for the community and for themselves.

"People who come are helping us by talking to us, asking us questions and commenting on our work," Gibbs said.

This sort of communication is to bridge the gap between artist and audience, Gibbs said.

"I think there is a disconnection between audience and artist in society today," Gibbs said. "I hope by opening up our studio, they can find a common ground."

Career Fair connects students with employers

By Karthik Reddy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Employers in the hospitality and travel fields will swarm the Union Ballroom today to connect with students interested in full- or part-time employment.

The hospitality, recreation and travel career fair is in the ballroom today from noon to 4 p.m.

Kristy Morgan, assistant director of Career and Employment Services, said the fair is targeted at students seeking seasonal, part-time or full-time employment in any related industry sponsored by the fair.

The career fair, currently in its third year, is designed to help students with a background in the hospitality, recreation or travel arenas, but it also aims to attract employers looking for a greater diversity in the students they hire, she said.

The employers at the H.a.R.T. career fair provide employment opportunities across a variety of fields and want to hire students, Morgan said.

"Students are more comfortable at a smaller fair like this and can find excellent job opportunities tailored to their needs," Morgan said. "It is a nice place to meet people and find jobs that are suitable for them."

Morgan said the fair also allows various camps to participate in recruiting younger students in a formalized setting rather than setting up a booth in the Union and hoping that students will show up.

The H.a.R.T career fair allows all interested organizations to come together as one large group and provide students with valuable information and opportunities, Morgan said.

She also said some of the employers are staying overnight to schedule next-day interviews with students and will be in direct communication with them.

Erin Gouldthorpe, employer and campus relations for CES, said the fair is a great way for students to network with employers and talk to representatives in person to get first-hand information about internships, full-time jobs or seasonal employment.

She said the fair is open to all interested students but is primarily designed for students in the Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institution Management and Dietetics. It also targets students in the Department of Horticulture, Forestry and Recreation Resources.

About 400-500 students are expected to attend the fair, and each of them will receive a complete information packet about the companies in attendance and a map detailing their locations in the ballroom, Gouldthorpe said.

Time for baseball predictions

NATHAN RYERSON

My fellow students, the best time of the year is upon us.

The air feels crisper and the wind smells a little sweeter.

What is that smell you ask?

Is it the men's basketball team?

No, that is the smell of major league baseball. Spring is just around the corner, which means baseball season is almost here.

Pitchers and catchers are reporting to camp. Opening day is not far away and I can barely contain myself.

I've already started wearing my Kansas City Royals apparel again, despite the disappointment I received from them last year.

My hopes and dreams of a post-season birth and an American League Central Division title were crushed like a corked Sammy Sosa bat.

This season has more to look forward to than seasons past.

Why? – might you ask.

Well, I will tell you.

FOR ROYALS FANS

Royals fans get to see the birth of the next Greg Maddux right in front of their very eyes. Zack Greinke is the best rookie pitcher I have ever seen; now he is back to show us his new moves.

This guy has a curveball the makes even the best slugger look bad. He will be something to watch throughout the season.

As for the rest of the team, they will be interesting, too.

We are in the "youth movement" again, which can mean one of two things:

One, the young guys can step up and make a team out of the Royals this year. Or, they can suck as they have in the past, and we can hang out in AL Central basement.

CUBS FANS UNITE

Who knows, maybe the curse wasn't the goat.

Maybe it was the plague, a.k.a. Sammy "The Hop" Sosa, that got shipped off to Baltimore.

I never liked Sosa. At times last year, I thought he wouldn't have been able to hit his way out of a paper bag.

Near the end of his stay with the Cubs, Sosa discovered his teammates couldn't stand him, and the team members found themselves focusing on Sosa instead of the 10 of 11 games they lost going down the stretch.

Look forward to this season. Cubs fans will see new faces and a new attitude out of the team that will take them into the post-season.

STEROIDS, WHO KNEW?

Baseball players take steroids?

No way! I would have never guessed it. I would like to thank Jose Canseco for straightening this all up for me.

I thought Mark McGwire looked like a house because he worked out a lot, and now you are telling me he was on the juice!

I'm shocked.

Well, not really.

Steroids might be the talk of the season, but, honestly, this isn't anything new. You can't look at someone like McGwire and truly think he got that way naturally.

It's just not possible.

Hopefully the league will get the players off steroids and get back to baseball.

RED SOX'S RED SOCK

Wonder if they put it next to Sosa's corked bat.

YANKEES FANS BEWARE

It has to happen one year, and I hope this is the year. I can't stand the Yankees and I hope they finish last in their division.

By the way, Yankee Stadium is a pit, and New York needs to build a new one. It may be historic, but I was there over the summer and all I smelled was urine.

BACK TO THE ROYALS

Royals win the World Series.

Enough said.

Wildcat losing streak continues

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is never a good time to go on a losing streak, but the worst possible time to choose to is near the end of the season.

K-State picked the worst time.

The Wildcats 64-60 loss to Texas on Wednesday night was their third in the last four games and first back-to-back losses this season.

It also moves the Wildcats' record against teams from the Big 12 South to 3-3, and 2-3 against teams ranked in the Top 25.

"I picked K-State to win (the Big 12 Conference) because they don't have to play the southern teams twice like some of us do," Texas coach Jody Conradt said. "At this point in time, Baylor is sitting at the top and someone is going to have to reel them in."

While the Wildcats held the Longhorns leading scorer Tiffany Jackson to only eight points, Texas exposed the K-State zone defense knocking down 10 three-pointers.

Jamie Carey led the Longhorns, knocking down six 3-pointers for a team-high 21 points. Heather Schreiber added the other four 3-pointers, and finished with 14 points.

"The difference in the game was three looks," Coach Deb Patterson said. "We worked very hard to limit the inside look and I thought we did a great job of taking away a lot of the inside game, but we didn't

An upset Laurie Koehn waves to the crowd as she leaves the floor following a 64-60 loss to Texas Wednesday night at Bramlage Coliseum. The Wildcats battled most of the night but fell short in the last minutes. K-State will be back in action Saturday against Colorado.

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As she jogged off the court, the tears in senior guard Laurie Koehn's eyes said it all:

This one hurt.

No. 18 K-State's game against No. 13 Texas Wednesday night could have been a heavyweight fight – an all-out, knock-down, 12-rounder between the top two teams in the Big 12 over the last three years.

It was the Longhorns (16-7, 9-3) who delivered the final punch, however, as they beat K-State (17-6, 8-4) in Manhattan for the first time in 21 years, 64-60. K-State has now lost two games in a row for the first time since February 2002.

"It's disappointing to have two losses in a row," Koehn said. "Obviously, tonight's is really difficult to swallow."

Texas guard Jamie Carey and forward Heather Schreiber combined to hit 10-of-17 3-pointers to help end K-State's 23-game home winning streak against Big 12 opponents.

"Obviously, they (Carey and Schreiber) were hot, and especially when we'd make a run, they

Wildcats place 3rd in Florida golf tournament

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On Tuesday, Wildcat golfer Matt Van Cleave carded a 4-under par on 54 holes at the Matlock Invitational in Lakeland, Fla., which tied the senior for first place in the tournament and helped the Wildcats finish third as a team.

By tying the University of Missouri's Ben Scott, it was the second time this season Van Cleave has ended a tournament tied for first place.

"I think it was definitely a good start to the spring season," Van Cleave said. "I didn't play my best golf by any means, but I accomplished quite a bit. Obviously it would be nice to win outright, but it's still a medalist finish. I'm not concerned whether it says tied for first or first."

"I think it's a tournament that he has pointed toward for a while now," head coach Time Norris said of Van Cleave. "He really put in some quality time during the winter and has practiced a lot. It's great to see it pay off for him. He has a great chance to have a good spring, and he went down there and did a great job."

In its first action of the spring, K-State as a team finished with a combined three-round score of 883 (+19), which left the Wildcats just nine strokes behind second-place finisher Georgia College and State.

Host school Florida Southern won the invitational on the strength of a final-round score of 283 (-5).

Last year, at the same tournament, the Wildcats finished fifth. The third place finish on Tuesday was the second-best outing of the season for the Wildcats, who finished second at the Kansas Invitational back in September.

"It's mid-February, so that's a chance to play and get the season started," Norris said. "Its nice to go down and have some success. Everyone now has a better understanding of their game.

"It's always going to be a positive for us and a confidence booster for us when we can get out and play."

Another successful Wildcat was senior Nick Schumacher, who tied for 10th place overall, the best finish of his collegiate career. Schumacher finished the tournament with a score of 220, four over par.

"I played pretty good," Schumacher said. "I was down there trying to stay within myself and play my own game, and it worked out. It was a start to this semester. That's how I looked at it."

Junior Ben Kern finished tied for 15th with a score of 224 (+8), his third consecutive top-15 finish and fourth top-20 finish of the season.

Other Wildcats included juniors Tyler Cummins and Jonathan James, who finished 41st and 62nd, respectively.

"Third place as a team is nothing to be ashamed of," Van Cleave said. "It was more experience, and we'll take whatever we can get, and we'll learn and now we just need to focus on our next tournament."

PARIS — Lance Armstrong will be back in the saddle at this year's Tour de France, chasing title No. 7.

The Tour's only six-time winner finally put an end to questions about his plans for 2005, announcing Wednesday on his Discovery Channel team's Web site that he'll try to extend his record streak of consecutive victories in cycling's most prestigious event.

Armstrong

"I am grateful for the opportunity that Discovery Communications has given the team and look forward to achieving my goal of a seventh Tour de France," Armstrong said, according to the team's site.

Until Wednesday, the Texan had left open the possibility that he wouldn't compete in this year's Tour.

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — Drew Bledsoe will be released by the Buffalo Bills, a move that that upset the 33-year-old quarterback, who started every game for the team the past three seasons.

Bledsoe

The Bills will waive the 12-year veteran on Feb. 22, the first day NFL teams are allowed to officially release players. J.P. Losman, a first-round draft choice last April, will be next year's starter.

He threw for 2,932 yards with 20 touchdowns and 16 interceptions last season and had a passer rating of 76.6.

NHL | NHL Commissioner cancels remainder of season

NEW YORK — The NHL canceled what little was left of the season Wednesday after a series of last-minute offers were rejected on the final day of negotiations.

A lockout over a salary cap shut down the game before it ever got a chance to start in October. Now the NHL, already low on the popularity scale in the United States, becomes the first major pro sports league in North America to lose an entire season to a labor dispute.

"As I stand before you today, it is my sad duty to announce ... it no longer is practical to conduct even an abbreviated season," commissioner Gary Bettman said. "Accordingly, I have no choice but to announce the formal cancellation of play for 2004-05."

Pomeroy has been busy, but is preparing for future tours

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

2004 was a busy year for Pomeroy.

The band toured across America and did a three-week stint overseas playing for American troops.

With that schedule, it's no surprise the band took a break in December and January, but for Pomeroy, a break still means playing five shows a month, David Fairbanks, vocalist and hand percussionist for Pomeroy, said.

"It's been a while since we've had a break," Fairbanks said. "The last album we put out was in August 2003, and we haven't had a break since then. We've pretty much have been playing 15 to 20 shows a month."

Breaks are rare for Pomeroy, because the band members make most of their money on the road, Fairbanks said. He said when they're not on the road, they have to be doing something to justify not playing, and in this case, it was preparing for their upcoming album.

"We used our time focusing on our new album," Fairbanks said. "We have more material for this one than we've had for past albums. We have 18 to 20 songs to choose from."

Even though Pomeroy is in the pre-production process of their new album, Matt Marron, vocalist and guitarist, said he isn't sure if they will try to get a record deal or work it on their own.

"We've been writing for 20 new songs, and now we have to try and narrow it down to 12 or 13," Marron said. "We're not sure if we want to do this on our own or get a record deal. What we might do is record three to four songs and try to shop it to get a deal."

Pomeroy is at a creative point it has never been at before, and the members are able to come up with songs left and right, Fairbanks said.

"I've said it before; there's not one thing about Pomeroy I don't enjoy, and that includes writing," Fairbanks said. "Everybody is more involved in the entire process than ever before.

"Matt (Marron) has generally been the one who wrote a good portion of our songs. We've generally called him our principle writer. We've been together for about seven years and everyone is contributing more to song writing."

The band is always striving to take it to the next level, but now it seems different, Fairbanks said.

"We've always wanted to make it, but now it's different because we're basically becoming the next level instead of having the conscious effort," Fairbanks said. "Now we can basically sit back and enjoy what we've accomplished.

"We used to be working at trying to find an agent, and now people are calling us, and we can focus more on song writing. I think that's the biggest thing."

Marron said the band is ready to get back on the road, and they already have a tour lined up for the spring.

"We met some bands at Rock Boat in October," Marron said. "There were a lot of bands, including Sister Hazel and Tonic, and we made some connections and we met a band called Virginia Coalition that we're going to tour for a while with.

"We'll be touring until late March and April, then after April we'll be back in the Midwest."

Coming back to Manhattan is always great for Pomeroy, Marron said. He said they've called several cities in the area home, but Manhattan is where Pomeroy started.

"We love coming back to Manhattan," Marron said. "It's special, too, because playing in Aggieville is like going back to our roots. It reminds us of the progress we've made. It's very nostalgic."

Fairbanks said playing Rusty's is like returning home, because that is where they first started playing.

"It's where we'd set up our drums on the old stage, and we'd play to the drunk people," Fairbanks said. "But then our following got bigger and we outgrew it. So coming back to Rusty's will be emotional, because to us, Rusty's is Manhattan."

Quiz offers insight to sex personality, knowledge

For a lot of students, college is a time of sexual awakening. People start exploring more and start to figure out their sexual personalities.

LACEY STORER

In case you are a little confused about just how sexual you are, here's a little quiz to guide you along.

OK, so it's completely unscientific, and I ran out of column ideas for this week.

But it's quick and fun, so give it a try.

1. The number of times you think about sex each day is:
a) equal to the number of classes you have that day
b) equal to the number of times you check your e-mail or thefacebook.com
c) equal to the number of breaths you take

2. You're flipping through channels when you unexpectedly come across a porn movie. Do you:
a) watch the wriggling bodies, wondering how the hell they get in those positions
b) start taking notes (mentally or on paper) so you'll have a few extra tricks next time
c) smile to yourself as you remember the last time you and your partner did the same thing

3. Your collection of props includes:
a) sexy underwear – what more is there?
b) sexy underwear and the requisite pair of handcuffs
c) sexy underwear and handcuffs and whipped cream and blindfolds and...

4. You can count the number of positions you've used on:
a) one hand
b) on both hands
c) both hands, both feet and maybe an elbow or two

5. To get you turned on, it takes...
a) candlelight, chocolate and a sensual massage
b) a bottle of wine and some sexy music
c) get me turned on? When am I ever turned off?

ANSWERS

Mostly A's – If you answered the quiz with mostly As, then you are a person on the brink of your sexual awakening. You've begun to try sexual things and are probably ready to explore a bit more.

The latest issue of Cosmopolitan or Maxim should help you with some suggestions on how to get started.

Mostly B's – If your quiz was dominated by Bs, then you are a sexually awakened being who has tried a few things and may be willing to try a few more. Or perhaps you've hit your peak and are comfortable with your sex life just as it is.

Either way, if you want to try new things, a copy of the Kama Sutra could help.

You've tried almost everything, and are always up for a bit more. For you, a daring new thing would be to (gasp) have sex in the missionary position.

Sports clubs to separate from campus groups

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sports clubs will no longer be a part of campus organizations pending legislation at Student Senate tonight.

Michael Burns, privilege fee committee chair, said this is the last phase in separating sports clubs from other campus organizations.

The separation is happening so sports clubs can do everything through Recreational Services instead of going through the Office of Student Activities and Services, Burns, senior in agricultural education, said.

A bill is on the agenda for tonight's meeting to move sports clubs funding from students activity fees, where other campus groups funding is included, to a separate account, Burns said.

Another bill addresses the amount of privilege fees going toward campus groups. Although it is the same amount as last year, it's considered a decrease, because sports clubs are no longer included.

Campus groups are going to be funded $183,579, and sports clubs are going to be funded $48,000, just like last year.

Burns said the allocation committee requested the same amount.

"It's not an increase in funding," he said. "It's just simply a continuous splitting them into two accounts."

Burns said OSAS didn't have the personnel to help sports clubs.

"They needed a little more supervision, a little more guidance," he said.

The position is being paid for by funds provided by the university, Burns said.

This is the last year privilege fees will be allocated to sports clubs through the Allocations Committee. From now on, it will go through the sport's council.

A member of the allocations committee will sit on the council as a non-voting member.

Sports clubs will register through Recreational Services, but it will ultimately go through OSAS, Burns said.

Vice Chair Tyson Moore, junior in information systems, said the change will help sports clubs.

"It's making thing much easier for sports clubs," he said. "It's installing a one-stop shop."

HGTV hosts to present garden lectures

'Curious Gardeners' will focus on future landscapes, designs

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two familiar faces from Home and Garden Television will present lectures on gardening this week.

Gordon Taylor and Guy Cooper, best known for being "The Curious Gardeners," will present two lectures on Friday to promote their new book, Paradise Transformed: The Private Garden for the Twenty-First Century.

The lectures will each cover different points from their book. The first will be on themes in gardens: garden form, materials, water, sculpture and plants.

The second will talk about contemporary gardens of the 21st century, including 20 international gardens that illustrate futuristic design elements.

Dan Donelin, head of the landscape architecture regional and community planning department, said that landscape architecture students are "encouraged to attend."

Taylor and Cooper have spoken in places such as Longwood Gardens in Pennsylvania, Cornell University, the Denver Botanic Gardens and the Sarah P. Duke Gardens at Duke University.

Lorn Clement, associate professor of landscape architecture, is looking forward to their visit.

"They look at a lot of creative recent work," he said. "Their books are full of ideas. I'm looking forward to two very informative talks which, in the positive sense, should be very entertaining."

Clement said he expects Taylor and Cooper to add some humor and creativity to the lectures.

"The second lecture on gardens for the future is a theme that is very interesting to me, because I think they will be showing work, the challenges and conventional approaches to this design, and showing students innovative approaches to the work," he said. "And I think they will be offering some humorous works as well as some serious."

Donelin said that the Department of Landscape Architecture is sponsoring the lectures.

"The college gets so much money per year from fine arts in the areas of interior architecture, landscape architecture and architecture," Donelin said. "We bring in speakers each year with the fine arts money and we supplement it with our own department money to bring the speakers in." Donelin said landscape architecture students will benefit from the speakers.

"We look for exemplary speakers that will both educate and challenge our students," Donelin said.

Baybutt said he sees bars banning smoking as a step in the right direction toward cancer prevention.

"It's really good that bars are starting to ban," Baybutt said.

"The earlier you start smoking, the more likely you are to develop lung cancer."

Goebel said she believes if smoking was banned from bars, it would decrease her personal smoking and others' smoking, as well.

"I think I would smoke less if smoking wasn't allowed in bars," Goebel said.

When Goebel visits Lawrence, she said the bars, with the no-smoking ban, are more refreshing.

"I like the bars in Lawrence better because they are a lot cleaner," Goebel said.

While the smoking rules in Manhattan may eventually change, one thing will not – smoking, both first- and second-hand, causes cancer.

Richard Baybutt, associate professor of human nutrition watches Xue as she lights a cigarette on the smoking chamber. The Center for Cancer Research at K-State is where Baybutt studies smoking and cancer.

CANCER | Assistant recommends fruits, vegetables

Experimental study is currently being conducted with two mice that will apply to humans as a means of controlling body weight.

These two mice are put on a treadmill daily, and their eating is restricted. Wang said this is being done to see if more emphasis should be placed on exercising or eating less for humans.

"So far, this biggest issue in weight control is calorie restriction," Wang said.

One recommendation from Wang to maintain a low calorie intake was to eat fresh fruits and vegetables, since they have fewer calories than condensed food.

Erin Richardson, senior in education, who has battled weight throughout her life, said the new obesity research has her concerned.

"I've struggled with weight for a while, so I am constantly watching my intake," Richardson said. "It's really hard in college, though, to afford fresh fruits and vegetables all the time and to find time to prepare healthy meals."

With calorie intake being the greatest concern for weight control, Wang said the Atkins Diet and other similar fad diets are not healthy or beneficial in the long run.

"On the Atkins Diet, you can eat whatever you want," Dr. Wang said. "You can eat all the bacon and red meat you want, which has more calories and increases weight."

"Weight may fall off quickly in a few months, but in the long run, there is no control for body weight," Dr. Wang said.

Richardson said she considered trying the Atkins Diet, but thought the concept of eating any type of meat but no fruit did not seem to make sense.

"The Atkins didn't seem like the healthiest way to lose weight," Richardson said.

As the ongoing cancer controversy continues, Wang simply suggests limiting calorie intake and exercising on a regular basis – two suggestions which are apparently obvious but not easy to adhere to in college.

The NCI also suggests oven-roasting, baking or stewing food as often as possible, because these methods of cooking are done at lower temperatures.

"I'll try all I can, but you can't control everything out there that causes cancer," Richardson said.

"It seems like moderation is the best bet."

that accountability to Carey and to Schreiber that we knew we had to bring. You have to defend on the inside and the outside."

In their last two losses, the Wildcats have given up 19 3-pointers and turned the ball over 33 times.

"I think our interior defense the last two games has been great, but then we have to extend that out and play defense on the perimeter," senior forward Kendra Wecker said. "If we do that, we're going to be really tough to score on."

With only four games remaining and two games back of conference leading Baylor, the Wildcats have turned their focus to the Big 12 and NCAA Tournaments.

"In the Big 12 Tournament, we're probably going to line up against Texas or Baylor, Oklahoma or Texas Tech," Wecker said. "We're going to get another shot at them, but our focus right now is to continue to get better as the season goes along so we can be at our best come tournament time. "We're going to go into the NCAA Tournament, not a two, not a three seed. Maybe a four or five, who knows what seed we're going to get."

would hit some big shots," senior guard Megan Mahoney said. "I think our defense, we played hard the whole game and competed well, but I think there were times where, obviously, we lost them. They were hot from outside and hit those big shots when they needed to."

But the Wildcats stayed close the entire game, thanks to senior forward Kendra Wecker's game-high 28 points and 12 rebounds, her 46th double-double of her career.

It was the second straight game Wecker has scored over 25 points while no other Wildcat scored in double figures. Koehn was the next closest Wildcat with nine points, all on 3-pointers.

K-State had a chance to take the lead towards the end, as Koehn found herself wide open on the left wing with 40 seconds left to play. She fired up a three, but missed, and the Wildcats were forced to foul afterwards.

"Obviously, I feel a lot of responsibility," Koehn said. "I feel like, in a way, I let our team down, and it's just something you've got to fix."

K-State came out with a different look defensively, as the Wildcats played most of the night in a zone defense to try to slow down the inside game of Texas center Tiffany Jackson, the Longhorns' leading scorer.

Jackson was held to eight points, but Carey, Schreiber, and Nina Norman made up the Texas offense, as each scored in double figures with 21, 14 and 10 points, respectively.

"Granted, we did a very good job of shutting down their inside game," Wecker said. "Brie (Madden) and Shana (Wheeler) did a great job on Tiffany. She's a tremendous player, and I think, for us to shut her down tonight was a big positive for us."

The loss all but ended the Wildcats' hopes for a regular season Big 12 Championship, as they fell two games behind first-place Baylor with just four games left to play.

Wecker, however, said the Wildcats have not given up and will continue to fight.

"I think we're going to bounce back from this," Wecker said. "I think we're going to be ok. There are definitely some positive things we can take away from this game.

"There's still some things on offense where we're not getting people involved in offense, we're not getting some scoring threats, but I think as we continue to work through that, things are going to open up for us."

SGA filing ends today

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Today is the final day to file for a Student Governing Association position.

Students can print off filing forms from www.ksu.edu/elections or get them from the Office of Student Activities and Services, said Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator with OSAS.

ELECTIONS 2005

Forms are to be turned in by 4 p.m. to OSAS.

Harlan said there are 148 positions open for SGA, which include Student Senate, college councils, Board of Student Publications, Union Governing Board positions, the president and vice president.

David McCandless, elections commissioner, said the filing deadline is strictly enforced.

"Unless you have some ridiculously good reason for not having it in, you better get it in by the deadline," he said.

If a student does not file, the only way they an be elected is through write-in campaigns, McCandless said.

"It's a lot harder to get elected if your name is not on the ballot," he said.

The primary election, where presidential candidate pairs will be narrowed to two, begins 8 a.m. March 1 and ends 6 p.m. March 3. The general election begins 8 a.m. March 8 and ends 6 p.m. March 9. It will include all positions.

McCandless said since voting is done online, it can be done throughout the voting periods.

Betsy Cauble, associate professor of social work, is the acting head for the department.

"You can't replace somebody like Len," Cauble said. "We were all very fond of him."

She said Bloomquist was active around campus and knew a lot of people. He took part in many positions, including the faculty senate.

"His interest was in rural sociology, he was always learning about the lives of people living in rural communities," Cauble said.

Gibbons said that Bloomquist was one of the best men he had ever known.

"Len Bloomquist was one of the finest, most honorable and quietly courageous men I have known," he said.

Research center takes shape

Facility concentrates on biosecurity

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

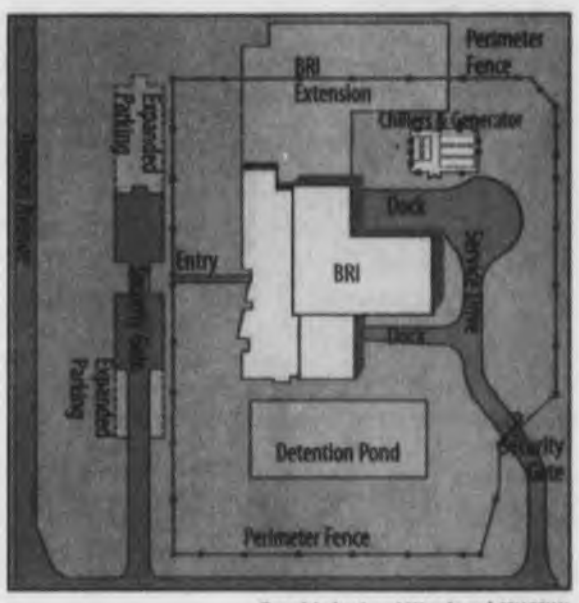
In 1999, a team of experts in biosecurity from K-State gave testimony in front of a Senate subcommittee, warning committee members of the possibility of terrorist assaults on the U.S. food supply.

From this encounter came the beginnings of the Biosecurity Research Institute.

Now, six years and nearly $50 million later, the facility is starting to take shape.

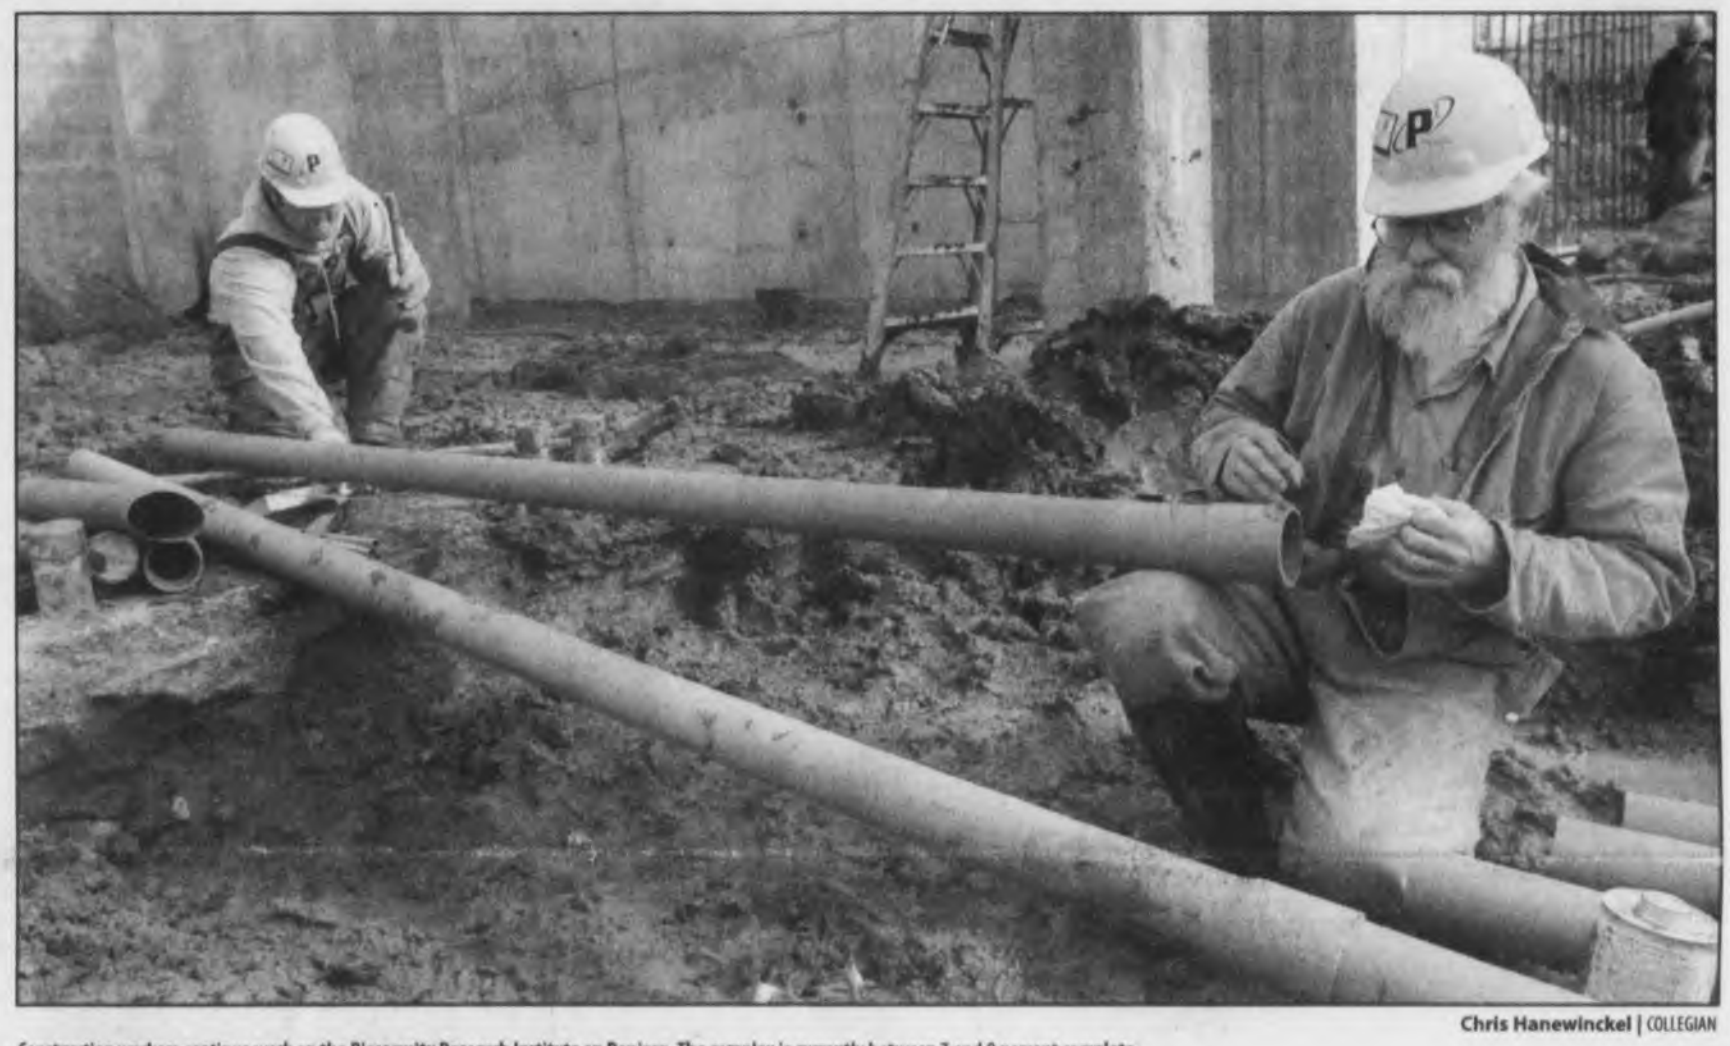
Gerald Carter, university architect, said construction on the biosecurity center began in August 2004 and is scheduled to be completed in August 2006.

The facility is on schedule, even though the contractors have experienced minor weather delays, Carter said. The complex is currently between 7 and 9 percent complete. However, even as the foundation for the structure was being built, one thought was on the minds of all involved – safety.



The facility will be a safe institute where research can be conducted on contaminates that affect not only human health, but also the quality of the U.S. food supply.

These pollutants, both microbial and chemical, may be naturally present or added with malicious intent. The institute will be divided into three main areas – a wing for studying large animal diseases, an area that simulates the processing procedure so it can be analyzed and an area of labs where plant pathogens will be studied.



Randy Phebus, associate professor in the Department of Animal Science and Industries, said even though K-State has a number of smaller facilities on campus, more sophisticated research will be possible with the new institute.

One of the advantages of the facility will be the ability of re-

Center to evaluate terrorism intelligence

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new Threat Integration Center has been developed to prevent terrorist acts or coercions from occurring in the state.

The Kansas Threat Integration Center (KSTIC) is a three-person team that works together to review and evaluate all of the intelligence information sent through the state of Kansas. The group sorts and filters the information based on relevance.

According to an article published on the Adjutant General's Department's Web site, the new system helps "to see that information vital to community safety and security interests reaches the officer in the street."

Kyle Smith, a spokesperson for the Kansas Bureau of Investigation, said the team, which is supported by the Kansas National Guard, consists of a senior Kansas Army National Guard member, a highway patrol trooper and a senior specialist for the KBI.

The team is designed to sift through information, categorize it by relevance and administer the reports to the appropriate areas of homeland security.

"There was a lot of criticism after 9/11," Smith said. "We're trying to do a better job of analyzing all of the information that we get."

According to the Web site, one of the team's main objectives is to see that all areas and levels of security and law enforcement are notified of vital information on criminal and terrorist threats.

Smith said he would be surprised if Kansas was attacked.

"Terrorists are looking for media outlets and large population centers," he said.

He did mention that the biggest risk in Kansas would be of bioterrorism or agri-terrorism, such as a feedlot or field being infiltrated with a disease or virus.

K-State professor's trial begins; Internet searches, prints raise questions

By Matt Sedensky
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A college professor, furious he could lose his daughter in a custody battle, bludgeoned and stabbed his ex-wife and left her bloodied body on her living room floor, prosecutors said at the opening of his first-degree murder trial.

The defense countered that Thomas Murray was a peaceful, calm man, saddened by the end of his 18-year marriage, and said no evidence connects him to slaying of Carmin Ross-Murray.

"He was the easy target," said Robert Eye, one of the lawyers representing the K-State English professor.

During her opening statement, Angela Wilson, the assistant Douglas County district attorney prosecuting the case, described a number of Internet searches she said Murray conducted in the days before Ross-Murray was slain at her home near Lawrence. Her body was found Nov. 14, 2003, and her former husband was charged with the crime late last year.

Among the things Wilson said that Murray had typed into a search engine at his office computer in Manhattan were "how to murder someone and not get caught," "murder for hire" and "how to kill someone quickly and quietly."

Wilson called attention to minor cuts, scrapes and bruises the defendant had when he was taken in for questioning the day the victim's body was discovered.

But defense attorneys said searches of Murray's home, car and office turned up no fibers, blood or fingerprints connecting him to the crime. Eye said there were numerous fingerprints on Ross-Murray's front and back doors that have not been matched to anyone, and two footprints at the scene in which her blood was found were not the prints of the defendant.

The couple, who divorced in June 2003, shared custody of their preschool daughter and were mediating custody issues at the time of the slaying.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Class action suits
Congress passed legislation on Thursday that would transfer most large, multistate class action lawsuits to federal court, fulfilling one of President Bush's second-term goals. The aim of the bill was to protect businesses and stop lawyers from reaping huge profits by filing suits in carefully selected state courts.

Shiites win
Iraq's electoral commission Thursday certified the results of the Jan. 30 elections and allocated 140 National Assembly seats to the United Iraqi Alliance, giving the Shiite-dominated party a majority in the new parliament. This sets the stage for the first meeting of the National Assembly, which will draft a new constitution.

Negroponte nominated
On Thursday President Bush named John Negroponte, a former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations and the administration's top representative in Iraq, to be America's first national intelligence director. Announcing the move, Bush said that he understands global intelligence because of his foreign service career.

Schmit, Holtzen file as 4th presidential pair

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Bill Schmit, junior in golf course management and finance and Jack Holtzen, junior in golf course management, announced their candidacy for student body president and vice president. The two will address parking, the possibility of bringing wrestling to K-State and seeing that buildings get repaired.

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the student elections quickly approaching, another pair has joined the presidential race.

Presidential candidate Bill Schmit and his running mate Jack Holtzen, both juniors in golf course management, filed Tuesday, officially making them the fourth presidential candidate pair in the coming election.

The candidates consider themselves bipartisan, offering representation for both liberals and conservatives, bringing them together with the campaign slogan, "Uniters not Dividers."

"We just need to get fresh faces in there," Schmit said.

"The issues are largely the same, but people from the same majors have been running. It's time to get some new blood."

Schmit and Holtzen said they want to offer K-State students new opportunities and are running on a multi-issue platform.

Schmit and Holtzen hope to bring more athletics to K-State including wrestling, which can be incorporated into the system at an estimated cost of $500,000 per year.

In cooperation with Title IX requirements, the pair also plan to incorporate either women's soccer or swimming, which K-State already has the proper facilities to support.

ELECTIONS 2005

Their campaign also focuses on parking issues, not only the lack of parking, but also ticketing procedures, which Schmit called "ridiculous."

Schmit and Holtzen would like to revamp the system and incorporate a step process where ticket fees rise for repeat offenders.

The first infraction is lower than it is currently and then increase with repeat offenses, they said.

Holtzen said to increase the number of parking spots, a parking garage is the most logical solution.

Furthermore, the two would like to allocate money for buildings and the residence halls for badly-needed repairs Holtzen said.

"There's a definite need for improvement," Schmit said.

In addition to improving buildings, the team is also interested in improving the wage system for students who choose to work on campus.

"It's a shame that people who are working through school have to leave campus in order to pay for school," Schmit said.

"We need to provide students with an incentive to stay and work on campus."

Other issues the team plans to review include making wireless Internet capabilities available to students campus-wide.

Also, they will take into consideration bicyclists and the dangers they pose, weaving through pedestrians on crowded sidewalks.

Both candidates advocate no smoking on campus

Neither have political experience on the collegiate level, but are involved in campus organizations.

Both were involved in high school leadership groups. Schmit said he still follows politics on a national level.

Both said campaigning will prove to be a wonderful experience.

"We don't get a lot of respect in our major," Holtzen said.

Senate separates sports clubs

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sports clubs are now considered separate from other campus groups.

Student Senate passed two bills that separate funding for sports clubs from other groups at its meeting Thursday.

The first bill funded sports clubs $48,000 for the next fiscal year. Then, other campus groups are funded $183,579. Both are the same funding as last year.

Sports clubs' funding are now separated from other campus groups because they are no longer directly working with the Office of Student Activities and Services. Instead, they are considered part of Recreational Services.

Michael Burns, privilege fee committee chair, said the separation of funding is the final phase in moving sports clubs to Rec Services.

"It's kind of the last step in the process to turn over the supervision to the Recreational Services," he said.

Last year, a sports club coordinator position was created to supervise sports clubs.

The clubs will still be registered as student groups through OSAS, but all paperwork and any questions will go through Rec Services, which is in the Peters Recreation Complex.

In other business, four groups were allocated funds.

The Kansas State University Potters' Guild was allocated $1,000 for travel to a conference in Baltimore, Md.

Student Friends of the Beach Museum of Art received $3,000 for two lectures and an exhibit.

Also approved at the meeting were commendations of greek campus groups.

Kappa Alpha Theta, Kappa Kappa Gamma and Sigma Kappa sororities, Sigma Chi and Sigma Nu fraternities and Order of Omega Honor Society received top national honors, which Senate commended them for.

Some questions arose on why it was only greek organizations.

David McCandless, elections commissioner, said by going out to find which greek organizations received top honors, Senate is playing favorites.

He said all groups should get the same treatment.

"Are we willing to do that for other student groups?" McCandless said.

Matt King, governmental relations chair, said just because greek organizations were first, doesn't mean other groups won't be commended.

"The intentions were good, and the intentions are still good," he said.

TO THE POINT

Students should apply for SGA's vacant positions

Only a few hours remain before the filing deadline for Student Governing Association elections will pass, yet dozens of positions – Student Senate and individual college council seats alike – remain uncontested.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Involvement in SGA is an opportunity for students to participate in a democratic process.

Presently, two dozen Senate seats and 43 seats on individual college councils remain vacant.

Vacancies are a disservice to the K-State student body, since an increase in candidates would have the potential to heighten the diversity of opinion.

SGA offers many opportunities to students seeking advancement, and involvement in the process is a noble way to lend a voice to concerned students looking to alter university policies.

Governing institutions are constantly in search of qualified candidates to run for office.

All too often, those who are best qualified shy away from serving their communities.

When that happens, gaps are filled by less-qualified candidates or, in the case of some positions, no one at all.

K-State deserves the best possible representation from applicable students; those sitting on the fence regarding the decision to run should take the initiative and strive to serve our campus.

Smoking or non?

Smoking ban exiles smokers, prohibits a legal activity in public

ABBY HILES

And if you have any doubts about it, go ask one of them. All you have to do is walk 30 feet from the nearest exit of any building, and there they stand. They are the group that is huddled together and cut off from the "normal" non-smoking world.

They could be bitter, but they aren't.

Over the past several decades, smokers have had to quit smoking on airplanes, in airports, in office buildings, in bathrooms and now smokers are starting to be banned from restaurants.

Yes, that's right. Not only has our government banned them from smoking in the work place, but now we aren't allowing them to eat in peace.

Oh, and I know what you anti-smoking people are saying out there: "They can still eat. Can't they just not smoke for, like, 30 minutes to have a meal?"

Try telling that to a smoker.

Obviously this facet of their life is important enough for them to stand out in 20-degree weather with gloves and a ski mask on to enjoy their treat.

Anti-smoking advocates rage on in the news media claiming that exposing others to smoke is irresponsible and that they shouldn't have to be punished for someone else's choices.

Smoking is legal. It's not like they are doing coke at the next table or passing an elephant-shaped hookah around.

After all, there are non-smoking restaurants out there where you anti-smoking people can go. The choice of to smoke one that every owner has to make for themselves.

And it isn't the government's job to impose laws on establishments.

Anti-smoking advocates act as if allowing smoking in restaurants is infringing on their rights. It's the restaurants' rights that will be violated.

And then what is next? No smoking in bars? Restaurants are a free zone. If you want to drink, you can drink. If you want to smoke, you can smoke.

"But Abby, we want smoking banned, not the smokers."

Same thing, people. Same thing. If we are going to start banning things in restaurants that are annoying, let's start by banning children.

They are loud, and they run around unattended.
Because everyone out there has had an experience where there is a tantrum-throwing toddler at the next table, but you sure haven't heard the smokers running to the legislature.

Of course, that's probably because they were forced outside to enjoy a smoke.

Abby is a senior in English. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu

Compromise the answer; ban smoking in restaurants, not bars

ANNIE LEWIS

Smoking is bad for your health. People still do it, because, hey, this is America, and we can do whatever we want to our own bodies.

Just don't make me inhale your second-hand smoke.

Whenever I am sitting in a restaurant in the worst seat in the house – two feet away from the smoking section – I can barely digest my food because I am hacking up a lung.

So why do I still visit that restaurant? I could just allow the nicotine-rolled death warrants to choose for me where to dine.

Uniformity is what I want, and the Manhattan City Commission candidates need to put this at the top of their agendas.

I have nothing against smokers, and they have just as much right to smoke as I have to clean air. If you want to be among one of the 440,000 deaths the American Lung Association says is related to smoking each year, that is your right as an American.

Keep in mind that second-hand smoke is responsible for 3,000 lung cancer deaths annually in U.S. non-smokers. I have no problem with you exercising your right to inhale deadly chemicals, but non-smokers don't want to do it with you.

It's not asking too much of the smokers in the area to smoke after dinner. Would it kill them to go an hour without a puff?

I propose a compromise – a citywide ban on smoking in eating establishments only, which excludes bars. If a business generates a majority of funds from the kitchen, smoking needs to go.

Enforcing this issue has proven troublesome in Lawrence, but they handled it wrong. The Lawrence Journal-World reported on Jan. 28 that businesses were being fined for patrons that smoked, and the smokers weren't punished at all.

Punishing the business for a patron's misdoings is misplaced justice. Companies that habitually allow their employees to break the smoking rules have the right to receive penalties.

In 2003, the mayor of Lawrence appointed a task force to research issues that might arise from a smoking ban. The reported stated "Most 'community-wide' statistical studies appear to show little or no overall negative impact when laws are passed restricting smoking in restaurants."

Smoking bans have been taking effect in states across the country. The sheer popularity of clean air even took Nebraska by storm. The Lincoln Journal Star reported on Feb. 3 that Senator Nancy Thompson is pushing for a statewide ban in all workplaces, including bars.

Every dining facility should put on the menu, "as a special tonight, the steak will not have its usual tobacco aftertaste. We are smoke free."

Thirsty Alter Boys named Sexperts

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On Thursday, this year's K-State Sexperts were named after winning the second annual Battle of the Sexperts.

Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators, sponsored by Lafene Health Center, put on the competition at the Union Courtyard last night, which drew in around 30 contestants and even more audience members. Nine groups participated with three to five members on each team.

After a battle over sexual awareness and responsibility with the other teams, Tyson Moore, Chris Rhoad, Tesh Patel, Kevin Phillips and Chris Harris of team "The Thirsty Alter Boys" emerged as the official Sexperts of 2005.

"Winning felt a lot better than I thought it would. It makes me thirsty," Phillips, freshman in speech communication, said.

Prior to the event, the participants did not know what to expect as far as competitive events, though they had a general idea.

The members of The Thirsty Alter Boys admitted that they had witnessed a SHAPE presentation the day before, giving them an advantage over the others.

The extra practice helped. Carol Kennedy, SHAPE instructor and advisor, said that contestants had to perform well mentally and physically to win in the end.

"The name sounds provocative, but in fact, it's based on information about STDs and sexual health," Kennedy said.

Throughout the competition, students competed in four different rounds, each round consisting of a different type of contest. After each round two teams were eliminated, until the final round where only two teams were allowed to proceed.

The events were judged by the Sexpert Panel, consisting of Lafene physician Wendy Blank and two SHAPE members, Pheasant Weber and Jerod Topliff.

Amanda Ebert, said that although her team "Da G-Spot" might not have won, they had strengths in other areas.

"I definitely had the best pick up line, it was, 'If I flip a coin, what are my chances of getting head?' " Ebert said.

The first round was a relay race involving lubricated objects.

All nine teams had chosen three representatives to put condoms on their hands and pick up the objects out of a bucket and race across the room to another bucket to drop them off in.

"I stretched and did my warmups, and then I ran my heart out, but it was so slippery and too hard to keep in my hands," Flentie said.

In the second round, the teams played a game of titled categories, where one representative from the remaining seven teams had to deliver alternate names or slang for the given categories: women's genitalia, men's genitalia, and intercourse.

During round three, the four teams left participated in a condom race, where one student from each team was blindfolded and required to put a condom on a banana, take it off and then tie it.

The first two teams with the fastest times, The Thirsty Alter Boys and The Missionary's, moved on to the final round.

Team "The Thirsty Alter Boys" won the condom race.

"I took first place, hands down. It's actually kind of sad," Phillips said.

In the fourth and final "Lightening" round, there was a power point presentation with sexual trivia questions over topics like STDs and brands of condoms.

Representatives from each team went head to head against the other, and The Thirsty Alter Boys triumphed in the end, taking the majority of the points.

"I think it was unfair, the judges were hypocritical. But, I'm always a winner in sex," team member Flentie said.

No team walked away completely empty handed, though. While all contestants received free T-Shirts, many participants were also awarded condom roses and gift certificates. The ultimate Sexperts, The Thirsty Alter Boys, received a plaque with their names on it, assuring that no one can steal away their title.

Terrorism detection 101

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Citizens and law enforcement officers attended a seminar on Thursday to learn about identifying terrorist activity.

"Terrorism and Criminal Extremism: A Perspective for Community Members" was presented by Dr. David L. Carter from the University of Michigan.

This seminar is funded by the Department of Justice and is geared towards law enforcement officers, but was offered to members of the community, said Dr. Andra Bannister, who is with the Regional Community Policing Institute at Wichita State University.

Terrorists are different from regular criminal extremists because they are extremely dedicated to their cause.

"We've got a lot of people out there that want a lot of stuff, but the terrorists are willing to commit acts of violence to achieve their goals," he said.

The most effective technique terrorist use is not killing people, but causing fear. Carter said that an act may kill one person but will frighten many more.

During the post-Sept. 11 anthrax scare, five people were killed by anthrax and 15 were injured, but millions across the nation were scared of being attacked next.

"These anthrax attacks froze the country," Carter said.

People everywhere were calling the police claiming to have seen anthrax.

Although there hasn't been a major terrorist attack in the United States since Sept. 11, 2001, there is still terrorist activity going on. The most common terrorist activity in the United States is raising money to fund terrorists, Carter said.

The nation still has to be worried about a potential attack, and just because Kansas is a smaller state doesn't mean it's immune to potential terrorist acts. To prevent acts of terrorism, the K-State Police Department has worked with the Riley County Police Department to determine what places at K-State, in Manhattan and in Riley County are potential terrorist threats, said Ronnie Grice, assistant vice-president for public safety for the K-State Police Department. These places have been prioritized according to their risk for terrorist activity.

The two biggest concerns on campus are when sporting events are held and the Nuclear Reactor Facility in Ward Hall. Grice said the Nuclear Reactor is already well-protected, and they are currently in the process of installing a closed-circuit TV system at the stadium to increase security. He said during a football game, there are more people in the stadium than in the entire city of Manhattan.

K-State Collegiate 4-H Club wins national award

The K-State Collegiate 4-H Club was named Club of the Year at the National Collegiate 4-H Conference in Pittsburgh, Penn.

They were chosen from about 80 clubs across the United States, said Kelly Grant, senior in bakery science and management and president of K-State's Collegiate 4-H Club.

The club was chosen to apply for the National Club of the Year after winning the title of Regional Club of the Year at the Regional Conference in October. For that honor, they beat out 37 other collegiate 4-H clubs in the North Central region.

"We have the most competitive region," Grant said.

They had to fill out an eight-page application listing their activities.

"It's based on what you do for your community, what you do at the national level and what you do for the university," said Justin Bolte, junior in animal science and collegiate 4-H member.

One community service event the K-State Collegiate 4-H is involved in is Second Helping with the 1st Congressional Church in Manhattan. The church serves a meal every Sunday night to the less fortunate.

"We help with that about once a month," Grant said.

They also work with 4-H clubs at the county level. They hold leadership training events in the fall for both adults and 4-Hers, and members travel across the state to judge at County Club Days in the spring.

"We focus a lot on going out to 4-H at the county level," Grant said.

The K-State Collegiate 4-H club is currently working on planning the 2005 Regional Conference, which will be at K-State in October. Members are planning workshops, community service projects, speakers, a banquet and a dance for members from the 37 other clubs in the region.

"We just want to show them K-State and some of the things we have to offer," Grant said.

Sharon Dobesh, the adviser for the K-State Collegiate 4-H Club, said the members worked hard to get this honor, both in the application process and the activities they did throughout the year.

"These guys were working pretty hard on their packet before they sent it in," she said.

"This club is very active."

Games need instant replay

MATTHEW GIRARD

We've all seen it in college football before.

An official makes a questionable call on a fumble, an incomplete pass or a player being out-of-bounds, and when the play is shown on the jumbotron, the fans are justified in yelling obscenities at the men in stripes.

Whether or not the right call was made or the call changed the outcome of the game, there is nothing anyone can do about it – at least not in the Big 12 Conference.

On Wednesday, the Atlantic Coast Conference announced they will use instant replay during the 2005 football season, after the NCAA Football Rules Committee voted last week to allow conferences to experiment with instant replay.

The ACC will use the system the Big Ten Conference used during this past season, with a technical adviser watching the game and paging officials if there is something questionable on the field.

Big 12 commissioner Kevin Weiberg and the coaches around the conference should jump on this bandwagon, too.

In such a competitive league and with the technology available, taking advantage of the concept should be a no-brainer.

All too often, the outcome of games depend on pivotal calls made by officials, and although they are trained to make the calls, the officials must make those calls in a split second.

I'm not saying K-State's season this year would have gone any different, but there were times when "another look" might have been beneficial.

Since bringing it back in 1999, instant replay is working in the National Football League (despite a few Oakland Raiders fans thinking otherwise) and is making the game more interesting by adding another element to coaching.

Some may argue that taking the time to look at a play would slow the game down, but in the Big Ten's review of its 2004 instant replay policy, giving a play a second look only added three minutes to the average game time.

I, for one, am willing to sit through an extra couple of minutes of a game to see that the right call is made.

Hell, if nothing else, it would give me time to go to the bathroom or get myself a beer.

Back on the mound

Following surgery on his shoulder and elbow, Mitch Walter is seeing action again as a pitcher for the K-State baseball team. Walter was out both the 2003 and 2004 seasons but has pitched already this season against Northwestern.

Walter back in the game after recovering from injury

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mitch Walter is back on the mound and ready to pitch for the K-State baseball team.

After sitting out the 2003 and 2004 seasons due to injury, Walter is glad to be back as a member of the 2005 K-State men's baseball team.

"It's definitely exciting," Walter said. "After sitting out for two years, it's great to come back and be a part of something special."

Walter's first action in 2005 was in Phoenix against Northwestern last Thursday. He was back to business as he pitched five shut-out innings while giving up six hits, no earned runs and striking out five.

"It was good to have Mitch back pitching for us," Coach Brad Hill said. "He has a great knowledge of the game."

Hill said it will be beneficial to the team to have Walter in Big 12 play.

"He has conference play experience, which will help out the young kids on the team," Hill said. "He sees things out there and has great composure on the mound."

Walter will look to get more time on the mound as the Wildcats head to this weekend's tournament in Texas.

"Every game we play is just a part of the road that will hopefully lead us to post-season play," Walter said. "Hopefully I can help the team get some wins to get us there."

Walter became a valuable member of the K-State pitching staff when he transferred to K-State in 2002.

Walter was named to the honorable mention All-Big 12 team by the league coaches that year, as he finished the season with a 4-4 record and 4.15 ERA.

In his first year as a Wildcat, he led the team with six saves in 43.1 innings pitched, with 35 strikeouts and just 13 walks. The six saves ranked him fifth in the Big 12. Opposing hitters hit just .263 against him.

Going into his senior season in 2003, Walter took a different position on the team. Walter had to take a medical redshirt to save his last year of eligibility, because he required shoulder surgery.

In 2004, Walter had to take on the role as a medical redshirt once again in order to save yet another year of eligibility. Walter had to have surgery once again, but this time on his elbow.

"It was frustrating, but I just had to stay patient," Walter said. "Having two major arm surgeries is a lot."

Walter went through two years of rehab and training programs and is now back for his senior season.

"I went through rehab programs and dealt with a real good training staff to get me back," Walter said. "I didn't want to rush anything."

Walter's rehabilitation was part of an intense program, a process which required almost six months per surgery.

"It is a very progressive process," said Casey Hairston, team trainer. "It is a very intense rehab that requires daily

Wildcats look to end losing streak

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When No. 18 K-State matches up with Colorado on Saturday night, they will take the floor at Bramlage Coliseum in uncharted territory.

With the conference home winning streak halted at 23, the possibility of a regular season Big 12 Conference championship is a long shot and for the first time in four years, the Wildcats could lose three straight games.

Unable to put together a complete defensive game in their loss to Texas on Wednesday night, the Wildcats will match up with the team that started their recent struggles.

On a six-game winning streak, the first-place Wildcats went into Boulder, Colo., on Jan. 29, and struggled with the inexperienced Buffaloes. Leading by only three at the half, K-State went on a 13-2 run with nine minutes to play and put the game out of reach.

Coach Deb Patterson said she would like her team to jump out to a quick start at home against a young Colorado team that only starts one senior, but they will have to play a complete game.

"I would love to be able to get out of the gate strong, and being at home, you can hope you can generate some momentum," Patterson said. "We would like to get off to a quick start. If it doesn't, then we're just going to have to grind it out and work possession by possession and see what nature the game takes on."

The game against Colorado marked the first time the Wildcats had given up 70 points or more since their conference opening loss to Iowa State.

K-State's defensive struggles continued against Texas. The Wildcats held Texas leading scorer Tiffany Jackson to eight points, but gave up 10 3-pointers. Jamie Carey led the way with six of them and

K-State (13-9, 3-8) had time Wednesday to regroup away from the basketball court after the team's fifth-straight loss.

Freshman point guard Clent Stewart said the Wildcats responded with a very competitive practice on Thursday as the team prepared to play No. 21 Oklahoma at 12:30 p.m. Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.

"I think it helps us definitely," Stewart said. "It helps get our legs back under us."

The loss to the Cyclones might be one to permanently erase from the Wildcats' collective memory.

K-State's point total was its lowest of the season and the fewest points scored since a 63-41 loss at Texas on Jan. 10, 2001.

Harris, who hit all three Wildcat 3-pointers, said K-State was looking for the outside shot too much.

"We're shooting too many threes right now, so we definitely need to penetrate," Harris said.

Stewart agreed, but said that the Wildcats had not been able to score from anywhere.

"We haven't been shooting very well," said Stewart. "We've been missing easy shots. All that comes down to is focusing and competing."

Oklahoma (18-6, 7-4) enters the contest coming off a 83-60 home win over Nebraska on Wednesday.

Currently playing with its longest losing streak since February 2003, Harris said the team is feeling the heat to finish the conference season on a high note.

"We've got a lot of pressure right now, but you've just got to fight through it," Harris said. "We've got a five-game season right now."

K-State Director of Athletics Tim Weiser announced Wednesday that the jersey of Wildcat All-American Kendra Wecker will be retired in a ceremony following K-State's home game against Kansas on Feb. 26.

Wecker

Wecker, who leads the Big 12 Conference in scoring at 21 points per game, will become just the second women's basketball player in K-State history to have her jersey retired. Former Wildcat Nicole Ohlde's jersey was retired last year.

Wecker has scored 2,144 points and grabbed 988 rebounds in her career, and is on pace to break Ohlde's school records in both categories of 2,241 points and 995 rebounds.

Specials the key to saving on liquor

By Marcus Hernandez and Abbie Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many students spend a good amount of money on alcohol during their college career, and it isn't cheap.

Liquor stores offer specials so students can save money and still enjoy alcohol without leaving enough money to pay rent for and bills.

According to a report by the Center for Substance Abuse Prevention, college students spend an average of $5.5 billion a year on alcohol.

Specials that are going to benefit your wallet depending on what you like to drink.

Justin Reedy, employee at The Library, walks by coolers sporting signs of the many different types of beer on sale. The Library also tries to keep a brand of rum, vodka and bourbon on sale at all times.

"Many liquor stores try to keep their best sellers on sale all the time," said Mike Towne, owner of The Library Discount Liquor.

These are cards that allow students to save 10 percent on non-sale items. For on-sale items, the Library Card offers a percentage off of the purchase, but not the full 10 percent that is offered for non-sale items.

Also, The Library offers 20 percent off on wine prices on Wednesdays.

Many Manhattan liquor stores offer wine specials. Nespor's Wine and Spirits in Westloop offers 10 percent off all wines on Tuesdays.

"We are definitely busy on Tuesdays," said Reed Hedlund, an employee at Nespor's and a fifth-year senior in sociology. "We also get business through K-State for the wine class that is offered, they buy the wine for the class through us."

Additionally, Nespor's offers a month-long wine special in May which offers 20 percent off wines for the entire month.

To some students, it's not about saving money, it's all about location.

"I don't really care too much about the sales; to me, it's more about location. We have a liquor store across the street from our house so, I just go there," said Eric Mann, a senior in golf course management. "If there was a really good sale I would probably go somewhere else."

Students said the key to saving at liquor stores is to know what kinds of things you like to drink and to stick with.

Most liquor stores will notice what people are buying and will be more likely to have sales if a particular item is selling well.

The last thing to remember is to always drink responsibly. Make sure you have a sober friend to drive you if you are partying away from where you live.

Coco Bolo's lives up to high expectations

Restaurant offers quality food, good presentation

Coco Bolo's has been an Aggieville staple for several years. But is it really as good as advertised? After grading Coco Bolo's on food quality, atmosphere, location and price, the answer is yes.

WILL KLUSENER

The menu at Coco Bolo's offers food that could be compared to a mutt, but that is a good thing. They combine elements of Mediterranean, Tex-Mex and other international cuisines into a gourmet mash that is quite pleasing.

Meals are presented on a designer plate with personal garnishing done by the chef. Service was prompt and friendly, and the wait was average for an upscale sit-down restaurant (about 20-25 minutes).

The pasta was excellent and the salad was delightful, with impeccably fresh greens. Their sangria was less than perfect, but still complimented the meal nicely and eased the wait between order and arrival.

Atmosphere is always an important element in the construction of a fine restaurant, and here is where Coco Bolo's slipped a bit. Lighting is a key ingredient in good atmosphere, and it is always nice to be able to see the food you're eating.

The inside of the restaurant seemed like dining in a cave with a small fire burning at the very back. It took quite a bit of time to adjust to the dark, and even then, it was difficult to see.

Grading scale
Food Quality: A Atmosphere: B-
Location: A+
Price: A-
Overall: A

Overall, there was a general stuffy feeling to the place.

Location is also important, and in this respect, Coco Bolo's scores highly. Situated at the junction of Manhattan and Bluemont, perhaps the most visible corner of Aggieville, it would be a challenge to find anyone who isn't aware of their location.

They've also taken advantage of the great location by putting up a very colorful mosaic-style sign. People are aware of Coco Bolo's as a status symbol and can be clearly seen entering or exiting the restaurant.

For all of this, one might think that in order to dine at Coco Bolo's a hefty price must be paid. To a certain extent, this is true.

Meals range on average from $9 to $18, depending on what is included. The food is of great quality, and a good meal can be had reasonably. If fast food isn't a constant part of your diet, price shouldn't be a problem.

Overall, Coco Bolo's is a fine restaurant. The food, while not top-notch, is still very good. A little more light would be nice, but the location is great for most college students and the price is fair.

Dan Foreman (Dennis Quaid) is headed for a shakeup. He is demoted from head of ad sales for a major magazine when the company he works for is acquired in a corporate takeover. His new boss, Carter Duryea (played by Topher Grace), is half his age — a business school prodigy who preaches corporate synergy. Dan and Carter's uneasy friendship is thrown into jeopardy when Carter falls for Dan's daughter Alex (Scarlett Johansson).

"Pooh's Heffalump Movie" (G)
4, 5:45, 7:30, 9:15
The residents of The Hundred-Acre Woods are hearing strange noises. Maybe it's a Heffalump? Of course, nobody quite knows what a Heffalump is, but it sounds pretty scary. Naturally, it's up to Pooh and his friends to work it out.

Commission candidates to discuss student housing

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City commissioner candidates will be evaluated this weekend at a public forum at the Manhattan Public Library.

Jaime Morris-Hardeman, Tom Phillips and Jim Sherow are the three candidates who were selected by Citizens for a Better Manhattan. The forum is from 3 to 5 p.m. Sunday and is organized by CBM.

CBM is an organization that was formed by citizens to help choose officials for the city commissioner and school board positions. It is a fairly new organization which began meeting in October.

This weekend CBM has organized a public forum to let the citizens of Manhattan ask the candidates questions before the primary elections on March 1. The general election is April 5.

Angela Hubler, co-chair, said every candidate will make an opening statement, answer questions and make a closing statement.

No primary elections will be done for the school board, but interviews will be from 7 to 8 p.m. Thursday in the Manhattan Public Library.

CBM is devoted to maintaining the non-partisan character of local government, maintaining neighborhoods with safe and affordable housing, supporting the quality of the educational system and other ideals.

A large issue that may be discussed is housing in Manhattan, Hubler said.

"We would like to see K-State students at the forum because we will be discussing housing issues," Hubler said. "Housing is something that is very pertinent to student life."

Chuck Thompson, treasurer, said the forum is a great chance for the candidates to speak to the community before the primary.

"Most of the issues that will be discussed are current and old issues," he said. "The goal is to try and set some policies to improve the issues."

Thompson agreed with Hubler, encouraging students to attend.

"I would love to see students vote more than anything," he said. "However, students are busy, and they are either from another place or on their way to some place else, so generally the participation is few."

He said there may be a few more forums to come, but that is still uncertain.

"We want people to have enough chances to go out and listen to the candidates," he said. "There may be more to come, but that is kind of up in the air."

Mild winter good for local roads

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Winter weather causes bad road conditions, but this year may not be as bad as others.

Jeff Hancock, director of public works for Manhattan, said last year the roads were in worse condition.

"It's not as bad as last year, but every year roads need work," he said. "Winter hasn't been as bad, not as much moisture."

Hancock said the city finds out about needed repairs from residents. Eighteen city employees are responsible for all the repairs within the city limits.

Repairs will begin in late March or April, and the city is compiling a list of the repairs needed right now, he said. Needed materials, like asphalt, aren't available right now.

The cost for repairs is not known, Hancock said.

"It varies every year," he said.

The most common problem with road surfaces is potholes, which can be fixed with asphalt fillings, Hancock said.

Lt. Michael Quintanar, with the Riley County Police Department, said winter weather has caused some accidents this season.

"There's been accidents, and the contributing factor has been icy conditions," he said.

Quintanar said since the weather hasn't been as bad this winter, there may be fewer accidents.

According to the Weather Channel, there is a 40 percent chance of snow Saturday.

Ty McCullough, general manager at Alan Clark Body Shop, said winter and hail seasons are the busiest times of year for the shop.

"That's when we see the most accidents," he said.

The shop mainly does auto body repairs, McCullough said.

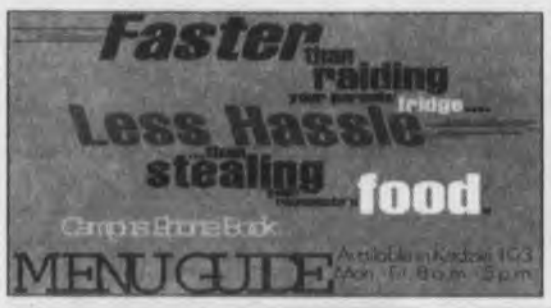
The number of vehicles the shop has seen this season hasn't been out of the ordinary, McCullough said.

"For the weather we've had, it's been normal," McCullough said.

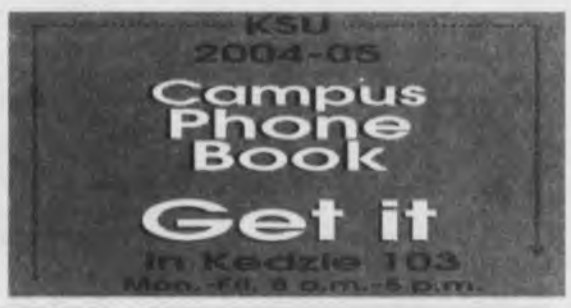
Bryan Hamilton, auto technician at Westgate Auto Repair, said he's seen a decrease in the number of vehicles needing repairs. Much of the work Westgate does is realignment.

"I don't know if the drivers wisened up or what," he said.

Potholes and other problematic road conditions do not directly cause cars to need realignment, but they can contribute, Hamilton said.



Summer is Westgate's busiest time, he said. People like to have their cars realigned or serviced before or after vacation.



He said that because of rough roads, worn-out parts and other factors, every car needs to be realigned at some point.

"It's a natural thing," Hamilton said. "Every vehicle needs realigned every 20,000-25,000 miles, but people tend to neglect that."

McCullough said people should be attentive when driving on icy roads.

"It's more (a matter of) not knowing the conditions they're driving on," he said. "A lot of it's just more or less being very attentive."

searchers to analyze every aspect of the commercial food process.

"We can mimic the whole live animal to commercial procedure," Phebus said.

Jerry Jaax, the vice provost for research compliance, described the research as "field to fork," analyzing every aspect, from the production of the food to processing it for consumers.

"In terms of live animals, and the size of the live animals and the food processing center, it's very unique in the world," Phebus said.

The main purpose of the facility is the security of the food supply in the United States. The 112,955 square-foot facility will have nearly 34,000 square feet of space dedicated not only to research, but also to training for nearly any emergency situation.

When it is completed, the building will be a biosafety level three structure, a definition used by the Center for Disease Control to define how safe a facility is and what types of pathogens it will be capable of handling. The highest level of security is a four.

There are several biosafety level one and two facilities on campus capable of handling less- than-lethal pathogens, such as salmonella. However, a level three structure is capable of studying potentially lethal diseases, such as anthrax, according to the American Biological Safety Institute's Web site.

With the presence of these pathogens, there are risks involved. However, security and safety are the primary concerns for anyone working with the institute.

Carter said these concerns have been taken into consideration for every aspect of the facility.

"We have to take certain precautions in the design of the laboratory and the physical structure of the building to make sure that what is inside the labs stays inside the labs," he said.

Curtis Kastner, the director of the Food Science Institute, said there is practically no risk involved with the presence of this facility.

"These types of facilities are all over the U.S. in the same kind of setting," he said.

Not only will the building have to keep what is in the laboratories in, but it will also have to keep unwanted visitors, with or without malicious intent, out.

Electricians finish installing a section of underground electrical conduits Wednesday afternoon. Workers spent most of the day Tuesday and Wednesday removing and drying mud so they could continue work on the Biosecurity Research Institute.

Kastner said the facility will be gated and will have only one entrance, which will require a keycard to access.

James Guikema, associate vice provost, said no one will be in the envelope of safety the labs provide unless it is necessary. Carter said there are a variety of security precautions that will be in place for the building, the research subjects, faculty, staff and occupants.

attention."

Hairston said Walter did a lot of at-home training, which speaks of Walter's dedication.

Going through the two surgeries and coming back the way he is now is a true test of Walter's character, Hill said.

"It is hard enough to go through one arm surgery, let alone two," Hill said. "That shows you how much he really wants to be back out on that field for the team.

"He is very unselfish," he said.

Walter and the rest of the Wildcats (0-2) will continue play this weekend in the Texas-Arlington Invitational.

K-State will try to work out its starting rotation, while continuing to get production from the bullpen. The bullpen has a 0.00 ERA in 9.0 innings this season, while giving up just one unearned run.

"We will be trying to work out a rotation for our pitching staff," Hill said. "We have three guys that haven't pitched."

As for the rest of the team, Hill said they just need to get in game situations.

"We are still trying to get focused as a team and playing in game situation helps us do that," Hill said.

K-State takes the field on Friday at 11:30 a.m. against Arkansas State (3-1) in the Texas-Arlington Invitational. K-State will then face Texas-Arlington (3-4) at 3:30 p.m. on Saturday and an early season rematch with Northwestern at 3:30 p.m. on Sunday.

Heather Schreiber had the other four to lead the Longhorns.

In the last two games, the Wildcats have given up 19 3-pointers.

"I think offensively there are some things we need to fix," senior Kendra Wecker said. "Defensively, I think that's where we need to key in. The things on offense will come, but defensively there are things we really need to tighten up and get the job done."

In the last two games, Wecker has posted conference game highs, with 29 against Texas and 28 against Oklahoma.

Sophomore Claire Coggins said that the rest of the team needs to pick up the scoring and take the offensive load off of Wecker.

"I think in any give game, anyone of us are able to step up and take an offensive load," Coggins said.

"Obviously, you have Wecker always having a great offensive night, but I think it's vital for more of us to step up."

ELECTION | Deadline today

Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said time commitments for SGA vary. For Student Senate, senators attend Senate and committee meetings each week, which is an average of three or four hours a week.

However, many senators get more involved and that's when time varies greatly, she said.

"If you are actively involved, it depends on the week and what time of year and what major events are happening," Urkevich said.

McCandless said council time commitments vary depending on the council, but it is probably an hour a week average.

If running for office, one mandatory information meeting is required, he said. The meetings are at 4 p.m. Monday and Tuesday in the Little Theater in the Union.

Urkevich said she encourages students to run for office. It is not necessary to have previously held a position with SGA to run.

"It's an incredible way to meet people on campus and get to know your university," she said.

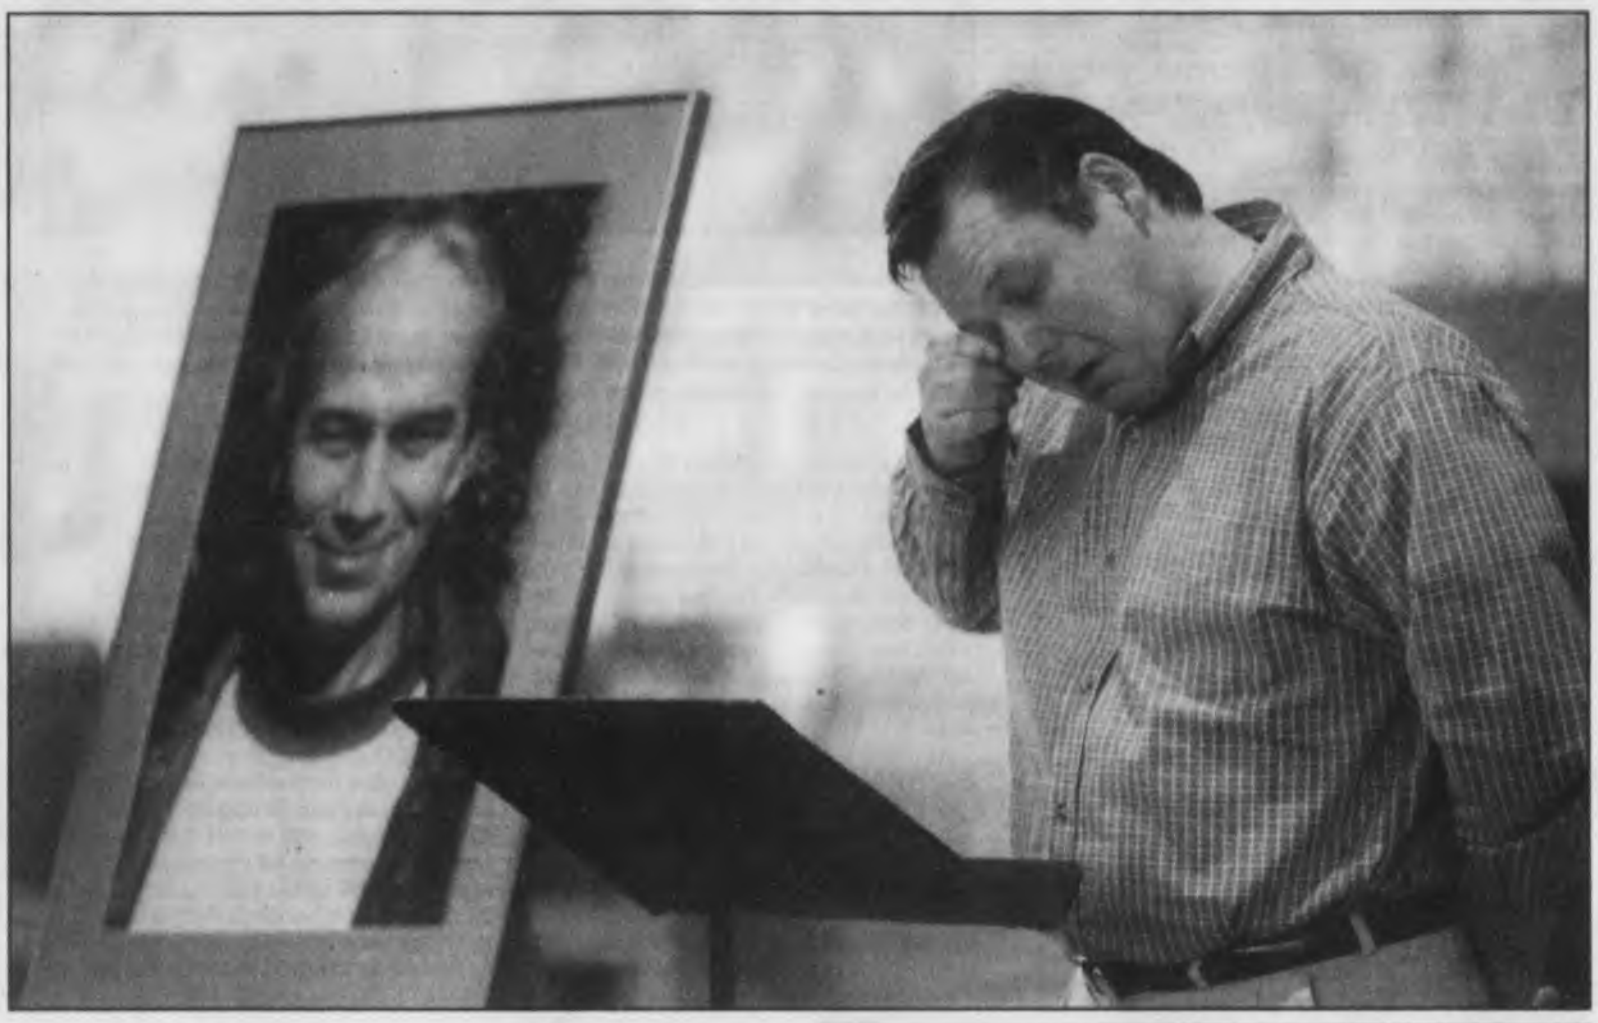
Professor's trial resumes

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The second day of deliberations in the Thomas Murray murder trial brought in the first package of evidence: photos of Murray's hands covered in nicks and bruises the day after his ex-wife was found dead.

The detective testified that Murray, K-State English professor, concealed his right hand during a police interview, according to the Lawrence Journal-World.

The Journal-World reports that two witnesses testified they smelled an unexplained odor in Murray's home the night his ex-wife, Carmin Ross, was found dead in Douglas County.



The trial will resume Tuesday, with a nine-hour, videotaped statement Murray gave to police, the Lawrence Journal-World said.

Angela Hayes, Ross' friend, testified Friday that Murray and Ross failed mediation sessions and would soon enter a custody battle over their daughter, Ciara, reports the Topeka Capitol-Journal.

The Capitol-Journal reports that the smell Hayes noticed in Murray's home was of a cleaning chemical and of rot.

Life of teaching

Department head remembered fondly

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Faculty, students, friends and family gathered at All Faiths Chapel Friday to remember the life of Leonard Bloomquist.

Bloomquist, associate professor and head of the sociology department, died Feb. 7 after a battle with cancer, which he was diagnosed with in fall 2004.

Friends and family remembered Bloomquist as a compassionate man who was hesitant to say anything negative about anyone and who would put others before himself.

"He wasn't about Len," Stephen White, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said. "He was about everyone around him."

"My dad died when I was 15, and Len was one of my brothers who fulfilled that role," Troy Bloomquist said.

Even after the brothers left home, he remained a prominent figure in the lives of his family members.

"When Len came into town, he stayed at my house," Troy Bloomquist said. "Every time he came, he would read books to my kids."

Tim Bloomquist, another of Bloomquist's brothers, said his family was always a priority.

"There was one thing Len loved more than teaching, and that was his family," Tim Bloomquist said.

Bloomquist is survived by his wife, Kathryn.

Even after he learned he had cancer, he did not want to let his colleagues down by quitting too soon.

"It was important to him to stay with us as long as he could," Janice Dinkel, associate professor of sociology, said.

Colleagues said Bloomquist was compassionate, even when he disagreed with them. "When he disagreed with you, he'd look right into your eyes, tilt his head and get a confused expression," White

"They wanted to give people a weekend day," McCandless, senior in political science, said.

Sarah Laib, senate operations committee chair, said there was no real reason to begin Tuesday.

City Commission candidates discuss housing development

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

City Commission candidates focused on city growth Sunday.

A public forum was held by Citizens for a Better Manhattan for City Commission candidates. Six candidates were in attendance. Candidate Jim Sherow was unable to attend, due to a conference in Florence, Italy, and was represented by Kate Watson.

The topics covered included issues such as preserving existing social services and improving Manhattan neighborhoods through providing more affordable housing outside of single-family, R1-zoned, areas.

In relation to Manhattan's 1 to 2 percent increase in growth each year, Candidate Jayme Morris-Hardeman said maintaining quality social services and neighborhoods are important.

"We need to concentrate on maintaining efficient growth of our city through helping social services and neighborhood stability," she said.

Candidate Tom Phillips said areas closer to campus need to be more condensed living, so areas further away from campus can be for single families and protected.

"We need to down zone to protect and stabilize our older neighborhoods," he said.

Phillips, Sherow and Morris-Hardeman placed emphasis on preserving civic space – areas designated for social functions within the community.

All candidates agreed that using bonds, proposed to the City Commission to support downtown development, would end in higher taxes for Manhattan citizens in the future.

Candidate Vincent Tracey, who has held several positions of public service as a police officer and schoolbus driver, spoke in favor of middle-income wages for blue-collar workers, as opposed to incomes that he said the current job market isn't providing.

"The jobs we have are ones that don't pay enough to allow us to live in Kansas," Tracey said.

Tracey and Morris-Hardeman said students play a key role in bringing new businesses as well as having a huge impact on local politics.

"We need to use the students here to open up jobs and to provide these

Death penalty debate
The Kansas Senate is still considering changing the state's death penalty law, which may take seven convicted murderers off death row. The legislators can repair the law, which was struck down in December by the Kansas Supreme Court. Only the U.S. Supreme Court can reinstate the death sentences.

Bush, Clinton visit Asia
Former presidents Bush and Clinton traveled Saturday to ground zero of the tsunami devastation, where they described the destruction as unimaginable. The two former leaders flew in U.S. military helicopters on the second day of their trip from the provincial capital Banda Aceh.

Bush goes to Europe
President Bush sought to repair relations with Europe, opening a visit Sunday to soothe allies embittered by the U.S.-led Iraq war and frustrated that their views were often ignored by the White House. Bush will urge allies to work together to advance democracy, particularly in the Middle East.

WORLD IN REVIEW: 7 THINGS YOU DIDN'T KNOW 7 DAYS AGO

Baby reunited with parents

EPA | STR

The proud mother Junitha Jeyarajah (right), who underwent a seven-week trauma while waiting for the controversial 'Baby 81', now named Abilash, reunited with her baby in Kalmunai on Feb. 16, 2005. Baby 81, rescued from among the tsunami debris, made headlines worldwide when nine sets of parents claimed it as theirs. The case went to courts and one couple was adamant that the baby was theirs. A DNA test was ordered and carried out in Colombo, and the claimants, Junitha and Murugupillai Jeyarajah were proved to be the real parents.

DNA test results confirmed Monday that a baby boy rescued from tsunami debris in Sri Lanka and named "Baby 81" belongs to the couple who launched a wrenching court battle for his custody. By Wednesday, the baby was reunited with his parents. The announcement came after weeks of turmoil, when nine couples claimed the boy following the Dec. 26 natural disaster. The Jeyarajahs were the only couple to file a formal claim.

EGYPTIAN BABY STABLE

An Egyptian baby born with two heads was in stable condition this weekend after doctors removed one of the heads during an intense operation. The 10-month-old Manar Maged showed no signs of paralysis following the 13-hour operation. The baby was born with a rare condition known as craniopagus parasiticus, which happens when an embryo begins to split into identical twins but does not finish the process.

JACKSON TRIAL ON WEB SITE

Close to 2,000 pages of sealed court transcripts of the Michael Jackson case were released on The Smoking Gun Web site Friday. The Web site, known for cracking private legal documents, would not say where it found the documents.

Jackson

Judge Rodney Melville has gone to many lengths to protect documents in the Jackson case before the trial starts. Melville ordered the grand jury indictment sealed, including the specifics of the allegations listed against Jackson.

TRIAL BEGINS FOR PROFESSOR

The murder trial for K-State English professor Thomas Murray began Thursday, with the first round of witnesses taking the stand. The first witness, Douglas County Sgt. Steve Grammer, described photographs taken inside Carmin Ross' home northwest of Lawrence when he first arrived on the scene during the afternoon of Nov. 13, 2003. After banging on the door, he said he saw blood and part of a leg when he peeked through a front-door window. Murray, 48, is charged with premeditated first-degree murder.

RIGHT TO NURSE IN PUBLIC PURSUED

A bill that protects a woman's right to breast-feed in public is now advancing in the Kansas Legislature – all because of a Lawrence woman who was questioned after she was found breast-feeding her infant in the nursery of a health club. It is headed to the House, where a vote could come as early as this week, followed by a trip through the Senate.

BUSH TO EUROPE

President Bush, along with the first lady, Laura Bush, left for a five-day trip to Europe on Sunday, hoping to heal hurt feelings from the Iraqi war and build stronger relations between the United States and European countries.

Their tip includes visits to Belgium, Germany and Slovak Republic, in addition to meetings with the French, Russian and Ukrainian presidents and the German chancellor.

NORTH KOREA ACCUSES U.S.

A North Korean state newspaper accused Japan of joining the United States' "vicious, hostile policy" toward North Korea on Sunday.

The paper's comments followed a day of talks in Washington between U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice and Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and their Japanese counterparts on the two countries' security relationship.

Parker, Schirer 5th student body presidential pair

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Non-traditional.

Parker and Dustin Schirer, senior in mass communications, filed to run for president and vice president Friday. The candidates said their goal is to make the K-State campus better for students.

"I see a lot of things going on at KSU that rub me the wrong way, and we'd like to change that," Parker said. "For example, the clock tower looks like ass, and we'd like to have it torn down."

Parker
PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

Schirer
VICE-PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

The pair is running on a four-issue platform. They said the issues are different from other candidates.

"We are concerned about parking, tuition and some of the issues addressed by other candidates, but they aren't the basis of our platform," Schirer said.

Parker said he agreed that their campaign was different, but said it was more practical than others.

"Other candidates think they can build a parking garage and promise other plans that are completely unfeasible, unlike ours," he said.

The first issue their platform addresses is the songs played by the bell tower. They said they would like to implement a new bell song system that would play humorous, bell-related songs. Parker said the bells would play more entertaining songs like AC/DC's "Hells Bells" or LL Cool J's "Rock the Bells."

Their second platform is that students older than 30 shouldn't be allowed to use the Peters Recreation Complex, Parker said.

"I'm tired of seeing tons of butt-ass naked old guys in the rec locker room," Parker said. "This problem can be fixed by applying an age restriction."

The third issue addresses overall student comfort. Schirer said there should be more couches around campus, because students deserve a comfortable place to study. He also promotes the availability of the energy drink Red Bull.

"The only place on campus Red Bull is sold is downstairs in Hale Library," Schirer said. "We'd like to place it around campus and make the product readily available for all students."

The final issue addressed in the platform is social activities for students. The candidates said they wanted to increase campus events like concerts and autograph signings by Kansas City Chiefs players.

"These activities will bring students together and allow them to have fun," Parker said. "We would work with the Union Program Council, SGA and the diversity council to find funding for these events and make them free for students."

The candidates said their slogan is "Vote for us, or you'll get hemorrhoids."

"Since I have advertising experience, I'm going to come up with a fun, interesting way to advertise," Schirer said. "It's top secret, but I guarantee it will surprise your eyes and blow your mind."

Pet store gains popularity

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With shelves of sweaters, racks of accessories and a jewelry counter, Claire & Harley's could be any store.

But a closer look reveals that this is not a store for people, instead it is a store for their pets.

Longtime friends and owners, Amy Goode and Shelley Neumann, opened the boutique and dog wash in September. They said they loved the unique pet items they found in big cities, but wished there was a place they could get them in Manhattan.

"Amy and I both spoiled our dogs," said Neumann, a K-State alumnus. "Manhattan has pet stores, but they didn't have specialty items like you'll find here."

Now they travel to trade shows in Atlantic City and Chicago to find things for their shop.

"We've found that if they make it for humans, they make it for pets," Neumann said.

That is demonstrated in their merchandise, which includes a wide selection of treats, like popcorn, frosted cookies, cannoli and even Poochi Sushi, all specially made for dogs.

"I've tried some of it," Neumann said. "It tastes good."

Neumann said they sold out of their frosted Valentine's cookies, and are now selling cookies for St. Patrick's Day.

"We could eat a lot of the stuff here," frequent customer Darlene Woolard said. "The Buddy Biscuits are all-natural, so it's good for the dogs."

The store, located at 108 N. 3rd Street, carries clothing and accessories for dogs, too. Aside from sweaters and shoes, Claire and Harley's sells more extravagant items like a $40 pink, furlined parka, cologne and rhinestone-studded collars.

"We have what we call our 'bling-bling counter'," Goode said.

The store has some more practical items as well, including leashes, mitts for cleaning paws and lotions for older dogs with arthritis.

The back of the store features another big attraction, the dog wash. The self-service dog wash has two basins the dog enters by walking up a ramp.

"The dog wash is incredible," Woolard said. "The ramp is great because my dog, Molly, is hard to get in the tub."

The store was inspired by Goode's St. Bernard, Harley, who died a few months ago, and Neumann's sheep dog Claire.

"My dog is my child," Goode said. "It's the same way with Shelley and with most of our customers."

"We've met great people and great dogs," Neumann said. "We have a good clientele."

"I think it's a great addition to Manhattan," Woolard said. "I'm really glad they're here."

Exchange program offers new scenery

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students from K-State will have the chance to continue pursuing their degrees at another four-year university in the United States, Canada or Puerto Rico through the National Student Exchange Program.

This is the first year K-State has been a part of the program, and Carolyn Comiskey, international programs adviser, said she already has plans to continue being a part of the program in the future.

"We're excited to promote the program," she said. "It's going to be going every year from now on."

About 177 schools are a part of the program. K-State is one of only three Kansas schools involved in the program. The other two are Wichita State University and Fort Hays State University. Students can attend another university for either a semester or a year.

The deadline for the application is Feb. 28. Comiskey said the application deadline is set for that date because all of the placements in the program go to a conference in March to make sure there are enough spaces for students at the schools. About 97 percent of the applicants get into the program and Comiskey said most are placed in their first choice school.

"I knew that Wichita State had it, and I was looking on the Web site and realized that K-State had it," she said. "They also talked about it in Student Senate."

Pelz is wanting to go to either Oklahoma State University, Iowa State University or the University of Kentucky.

Those traveling to other schools will pay K-State tuition. The only difference between attending school at K-State and the university a student chooses is the cost of living.

"Occasionally there are some campuses where room and board are more expensive," Comiskey said. "Otherwise, the cost is pretty much the same as K-State."

Comiskey said some students decide to go to other universities because they have an interest in pursuing a degree that K-State is not strong in. She said the program is also good for students who grew up in Kansas and want to spend time in another part of the country.

"I think one reason to do this program is that they can try new geographic areas," Comiskey said. "It's also good for students who are interested in a program that K-State really doesn't have or we're not very strong in."

Pelz said she wanted to go to another school because she wanted to see different parts of the country and different university programs in her area of study.

"Although K-State offers a wonderful program, if I went to Kentucky, that is part of the nation I haven't seen before," she said.

Comiskey said another reason some students attend different universities is to look at graduate schools within the colleges.

"If somebody's thinking, 'My professor told me this graduate school is really good and I might work with this professor', maybe I'll go there for a semester as an undergraduate and work with the professor there and see if I like it," Comiskey said.

Those involved with the program may also get business contacts that could help them get a job in the future.

"It could be good for their professional futures if they're making a lot of contacts in another state," Comiskey said.

Comiskey said she hopes students who pursue this program grow academically and personally.

"Perhaps study abroad isn't for everyone, but it's a nice opportunity for students from Kansas to experience other parts of the country," she said.

Professor to lead state disaster plan

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new emergency mental health plan is in place in Kansas, and a K-State professor has been chosen as its coordinator.

Briana Nelson Goff, associate professor of family studies and human services, was named project coordinator for the Kansas All Hazards Behavior Health Preparedness Response and Recovery Plan.

The main goal of this project is to develop a state plan for disaster mental health situations, which includes regional networks of professionals and volunteers.

Nelson Goff said she will also be training mental health professionals on how to handle emergency response versus everyday counseling.

"We will be preparing for a disaster and educating the community and teachers all over the state as to how to respond to a disaster," she said.

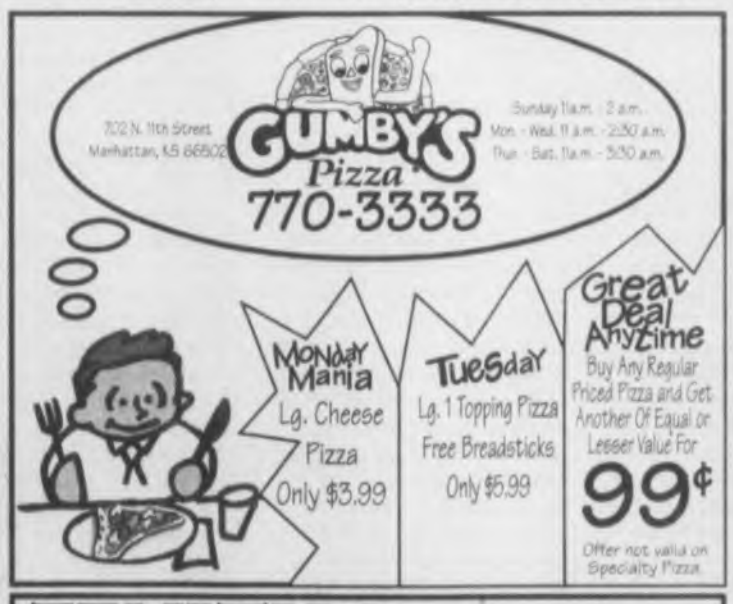
"It is one thing to respond and another thing to be ready to respond," she said.

Her work is centered in Topeka, where she will spend one full day each week. Four students are working with Nelson Goff to implement the project.

Jared DuPree, graduate student in human ecology, and Stephanie Wick, graduate student in family studies and human services, are currently doing research to make sure the plan is evidence-based.

"This is a great chance to be involved with a project of this multitude and meet many different people," Wick said.

Kansas does not currently have a plan for the mental aspects of dealing with an emergency, which the federal government required all states to have after Sept. 11, 2001.



"We are learning more after 9/11 that disasters do have long-term psychological consequences on the people affected," Nelson Goff said.

Once approved, it will become part of the Kansas Emergency Operations Plan already in place.

TO THE POINT

Affordable exchange program benefits students

The introduction of the National Student Exchange Program at K-State will be beneficial to students who take advantage of it.

It gives students more opportunities for their education.

For the same cost of attending K-State, students are able to study at other four-year universities within the United States, Canada and Puerto Rico that also participate in the student exchange.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The cost alone prohibits most students from considering out-of-state universities. This program alleviates that problem.

The program allows students a chance to go to other schools that otherwise would not have been available to them.

It offers an opportunity for graduating seniors to visit prospective graduate schools. It also allows students to pursue classes that are not readily available at K-State.

Not only will this program offer students a chance to visit other universities, but it will also bring in new students to K-State.

High school students will take this into consideration when applying for college. K-State is one of three universities in Kansas to offer this program along with Wichita State University and Fort Hays State University. Incoming students will be more likely to apply at K-State knowing we support this program.

This is a good chance for students who have been interested in studying abroad but have been too worried about moving.

Religious ailment

Academy Awards snub Mel Gibson's 'Passion of the Christ' film

KODY COOPER

Christophobia is a common ailment in America today. It afflicts nine out of 10 members of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, the group that votes annually for Oscar nominees. This year should be exciting. Among the 2004 crop of Best Picture nominees are titles that portray such historically important names as Howard Hughes...and Peter Pan.

Way out of Pan's league is an irrelevant name that the radical, left-wing Hollywood elites scorned. Shh-hhhh – Jesus Christ.

The name Jesus Christ is like a Rex Kwon Do, American flag-pants roundhouse-kick to the head for a Hollywood liberal. Even a whisper of "Jesus," and abhorrent fear sets in. This Christophobic madness is evident – Mel Gibson's "The Passion of the Christ" was not nominated for Best Picture or Best Actor.

It is easy to see why Oscar has snubbed "The Passion." The Christophobes that rule Hollywood consider a Best Picture vote for "The Passion" as sinful as a vote for that hick Dubya from Texas.

Racking up $370 million at the box office wasn't enough. Hundreds of cast members resurrecting the dead languages of first-century Aramaic and Vulgar Latin didn't cut it. Critical acclaim from the top critics was just appeasement of red-state viewership. The greatest story ever told? Only if you own a gun, drive a greenhouse gas-emitting SUV and listen to country music.

OK, OK, so maybe not Best Picture, but what about Best Actor?

Jim Caviezel, who played Jesus Christ, may have endured more suffering than any other actor in the history of film. Two weeks of seven-hour, full-body make-up sessions inflicting skin blistering and sleeplessness is just the beginning.

The outdoor crucifixion scene was shot during the Italian winter. Caviezel battled hypothermia while donning only a loincloth and endured the excruciating pain of shoulder separation on the cross. In a shot during a thunderstorm, the man was – get this – actually struck by lightning.

In one take of the flogging scene, a cattail of a whip missed the board on Caviezel's back and ripped 14 inches of flesh from his body.

Wow. Hypothermia, lightning (God must not have liked that take) and scarring, all while speaking a 2000-year-old language. That's pretty impressive. But wait – he was playing Jesus? The same Jesus who said, "No one shall come to the Father except through me." Well, that's not very sensitive to Muslims, Hindus and atheists. Best Actor? Yeah, maybe to all the close-minded, intolerant, holier-than-thou, country-bumpkin residents of Jesusland.

Maybe "The Passion" is worth a Best Documentary bid. No, hear me out – Mel could just make "The Passion Redux." First, he'll hire Michael Moore to guest-direct. Next, he'll get rid of the woman actress playing Satan. What kind of message does that send? It should be a man: everyone knows that man's aggressive, patriarchal nature is the root of all evil.

Moore then needs to re-film the flogging scene down in Guantanamo Bay. His genius will show how Jesus' sufferings pale in comparison to the "enemy combatants" being held against their will. Next, he could add a brand-new scene with Jesus telling Caiaphas that a camel has a better chance of passing through the eye of a needle than a rich Halliburton executive entering heaven.

Dang it. Mel would never go for that. Well, I guess there'll be no love for "The Passion" this February. It's no surprise, really. Jesus was shunned and ridiculed by the elites of his day, too. The only consolation is "The Passion" was beat out by an artistic achievement like "Sideways," and Caviezel was beat out by a triumphant thespian like Johnny Depp.

Democrats propose impractical gun control legislation

JONAS HOGG

The liberal machine is getting prepared for an uphill battle against a GOP-controlled White House and Congress. Step one in the campaign: introduce an absolutely idiotic law that is guaranteed to fail.

Four democrats have decided to wage war on the dreaded .50-caliber rifle, introducing the ".50-Caliber Sniper Rifle Reduction Act," which is designed to make the world a safer place for all. There is only one problem: all four of them are idiots.

One of the bill's proponents states, "this has nothing to do with the Second Amendment." Of course not. None of the unconstitutional anti-gun laws have ever had anything to do with the Constitution. It's always about "keeping us safe." The fact that there is no correlation between gun control and lower crime never stops this kind of legislation.

This bit of legislative diarrhea is centered on a bullet that is 12.7 mm across and the rifles that fire them. The gun grabbers have a particular interest in this bullet, since .50-caliber sounds much more sinister than other cartridge sizes, such as the small and insignificant .45-caliber.

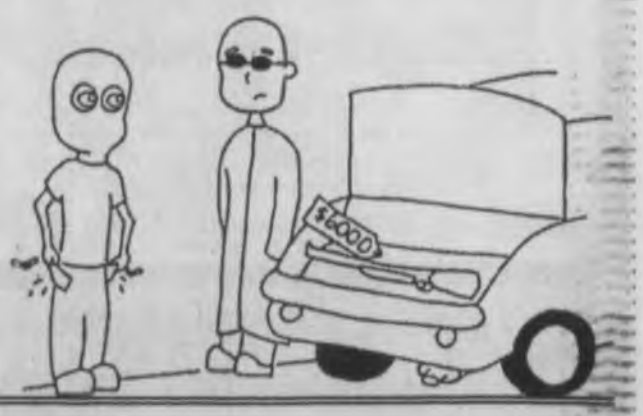
This bullet is the source of the most outlandish claims the anti-gun lobby has ever been able to cook up. Depending on which "expert" you are talking to, these rounds have anywhere from a one- to two- mile effective range, can penetrate anything from an inch of steel to a car engine, give the shooter the ability to see the future and just might enlarge one's penis safely and naturally.

The fact is that the actual capabilities of this rifle are far beyond the reach of 99 percent of the population. Christopher Smith wrote in the Salt Lake Tribune, "an experienced marksman can hit a rock the size of a Volkswagen Beetle from a distance of two miles."

By experienced marksman, he must mean a handful of people around the country, most of whom are competitive shooters. If an untrained shooter were to try to fire this weapon, chances are he would break his collarbone.

The other trumped-up "fact" that is offered is the danger of using the rifles for committing a crime. If my calling was mugging people, I would certainly use a rifle that weighs 32.5 pounds unloaded and is 57 inches long. Rep. Carolyn McCarthy, D-N.Y., one of the four behind this bill, was actually unable to lift the rifle off of the table.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., was even quoted as saying, "It is easier in this country to buy this weapon than it is to buy a handgun." Very true. These weapons require no permits or background checks, but the $6,000 price tag is well beyond the means of your average hood on the street.



But the bureaucrats have an ace up their sleeves-the ever-present "terrorist threat." Apparently, these rifles could be used to shoot at aircraft, trains and automobiles, thus wreaking havoc on us poor citizens. Thank goodness we're getting these off the streets. Never mind that anyone could put holes in a commercial airplane with a $50 pellet gun.

However, where the gun grabbers turn up snake eyes is on the actual usage of the weapon. To date there are none - that is zero - instances of people being killed or even hurt by these rifles.

Banning .50-caliber rifles to lower crime would have the same effect as banning dogs to lower tennis elbow. There is absolutely no correlation between the two.

Not to be deterred, the lefties plow forward with a bill that likely won't make it through our conservative government and wouldn't accomplish squat even if it did-worthless laws submitted by worthless legislators.

PERSPECTIVES

Bloggers sink traditional media

Illustrations by Jesse Manning | COLLEGIAN

By Marty Andrade
MINNESOTA DAILY (U. MINNESOTA)

The media are changing. If you want to know how media are changing, ask former CNN Chief News Executive Eason Jordan.

Jordan resigned because of the changing media arena. Dan Rather knows, too. He went head to head with a new breed of amateur journalists – called bloggers – and lost.

Sen. Trent Lott, R-Miss., was vilified because bloggers brought to the national media's attention his statements at Republican former North Carolina Sen. Strom Thurmond's birthday celebration. Because of this, he eventually resigned from his post as Senate majority leader. Bloggers delivered this year, and some very important people felt the sting.

For the most part, people don't like change. Most of my friends are skeptical of bloggers and other forms of digital media.

I don't understand the antagonism – why are the mainstream media, and their nearly religious followers, afraid of a bunch of guys in their pajamas? Not all of the mainstream media are antagonistic toward bloggers; they were ABC's People of the Year.

Many members of the mainstream media are getting their own blogs. Bloggers were invited to this year's Democratic and Republican national conventions.

But I understand how some people might have difficulty entering the blogosphere. When I first got started, blogs seemed incoherent; they didn't have an obvious purpose.

If you don't know how to get started, I can help. If you're a politico like me, I suggest starting at two blogs that are hubs. If you're looking for right-wing blogs, start at hughhewitt.com. For left-leaning blogs, start at newleftblogs.blogspot.com.

Quite frankly, I do not spend a lot of time reading lefty blogs, so you're on your own as far as specifics go. But there are a number of blogs I visit at least weekly, and they deserve special mention. The first is dalythoughts.com, a political blog done by Gerry Daly.

He kept me up to date on election information, including painstaking details about polls and their results. Now he puts together a fine political blog that proves his immense knowledge of all things political.

Another important blog is powerlineblog.com. It was named Time Magazine's Blog of the Year, and for good reason. Last year, Power Line took the lead in the question about the "60 Minutes" documents that were later found to be forgeries, and thus committed Dan Rather to retirement.

And if you're ever bored, spend some time on fark.com. I hope this helps gets you started, whether you are a stubborn member of the mainstream media, or you're just someone skeptical of blogs. I hope you give it a try.

Bloggers are best described by Hugh Hewitt: "They are cyber Sherpas, they take the vast amounts of information found on the net and turn it into a consumable form."

Hewitt is completely right. But not only are bloggers important in taking the wild currents of the information super highway and making it digestible, they are also important to the bibliophiles.

Bloggers link their sources in the text; if you want to see where they get their information, you can. Most blogs allow you to give feedback. So, if they're wrong, and you catch them, there is a direct process to challenge them.

The discussion continues, and you're involved. How often can you talk back to Peter Jennings?

Bring on the bloggers, pajamas and all.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Affirmative Action not yet been truly tested

Dear editor,

I notice that it is often said we need to get rid of Affirmative Action, but never have I heard any suggestions on how to replace it.

You are quick to say "we still have a long way to go" which to me means you know things are not fair to minorities. I guess you feel no Affirmative Action is OK as long as they are not unfair to you and the minorities can suffer longer until another solution comes along because they are used to it.

Affirmative Action has only been around for about 40 years and you are already complaining about being treated unfairly. Slavery was here for 400 years and discrimination still goes on today.

Fraternity values men's character, values

Dear editor,

Thank you for the article on Delta Lambda Phi fraternity. Though it was a good article, it did not say anything about the real purpose or goals of the fraternity.

Our mission and purpose is to provide a fraternity that will promote purposeful and dignified social, recreational and service activities for men of all sexual orientations; lead in determining the rights and privileges of individuals in society; and present a strong positive image which respects the diversity of all individuals, regardless of sexual orientation.

We don't just accept people because they are gay.

In order to be in our colony, you must share the same principles and values that we do.

Our core principles and values are brotherhood, honor, non-secrecy, social equality, open-mindedness, respect, enlightenment, ancient justice, leadership opportunity, acceptance and service.

These are all values that many men of any sexual orientation can possess, gay or straight, and these are the kind of men that make a Lambda man.

Delta Lambda Phi does not discriminate based on race, sexual orientation, socioeconomic status, ethnicity, religion or creed. But we do consider men based on the basis of one's character, values and commitment.

Wildcats end 2-game losing streak

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On senior night, the seniors led K-State to a 73-51 win over Colorado on Saturday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

Senior Kendra Wecker's 47th career double-double led a trio of Cats in double-figures. Wecker finished with a game-high 20 points and a game-high 14 rebounds.

In the past two games, both losses, Wecker has been the only Wildcat to score in double-digits.

Against the Buffaloes (8-16, 1-12), senior Laurie Koehn knocked in five 3-pointers to finish with 15 points, and senior Megan Mahoney dropped in 14 points.

K-State (18-6, 9-4) got off to a quick 9-3 lead, with Wecker scoring all of the Wildcats' points.

The Wildcats led by 15 points at the half, the first time they had by led by double-digits in a half since they defeated Iowa State on Jan. 25. It was also the first time they had scored 70 points or more since they beat the Cyclones.

"Coming off the two losses, it's real important to boost your confidence early, get a little bit of rhythm established and get a little bounce in your step," Coach Deb Patterson said. "I thought we did a good job with that, and probably a big part of that was feeding off the emotion of senior night and the great crowd we had here tonight."

The Wildcats held Colorado to 27 percent shooting in the first half and 33 percent for the game. The Buffaloes shot 26 percent from three-point range.

Mahoney said the Wildcats needed to play a complete game to stop their streak.

"We've realized that we haven't played particularly well for 40 minutes the last few games," she said. "We wanted to come out and be aggressive and work on some things that we haven't done so well."

In the first match-up with Colorado, K-State shot 40 percent from the field. In their win on Saturday, the Wildcats shot 50 percent from the field and out-rebounded the Buffaloes by 12. The Wildcats are 17-1 when they out-rebound their opponent.

Senior Chelsea Domenico finished with a season high seven assists, as the Wildcats tied their conference high with 24 assists.

Men's season as bad as it can get

JOSH WITT

It doesn't get any worse than this.

When officials ruled that Oklahoma guard Drew Lavender's shot did get off before time expired, and the replay showed no interference, a season filled with disappointment hit its low point.

In a year full of excruciating heartbreakers, this 69-68 loss at Bramlage Coliseum on Saturday took top honors for the men's basketball team.

This was a game that, had it ended in victory, would have gone a long way in salvaging a once-promising season.

Now, Coach Jim Wooldridge is left wondering what could have been. You couldn't have had a better first half.

Entering the game off its ugliest loss of the season Tuesday at Iowa State, the team played with as much passion as anybody had seen all year.

Starting a smaller lineup, with Cartier Martin and Jeremiah Massey down low, to go against the best frontcourt in the conference, the Wildcats held their own.

Martin's performance all day was incredible. Not only did he lead the Wildcats with 22 points on 9-of-11 shooting, and not only did he grab six rebounds, Martin willed K-State to victory.

When the rest of the Wildcats couldn't hit a thing, Martin made shot after shot. But it wasn't enough. Why?

The Wildcats fell back into the offensive struggles that have plagued them during this six-game losing streak.

They just couldn't hit anything.

After shooting 45 percent in the first half, K-State was just 32 percent from the field after halftime.

Yeah, the 5-foot-7 Lavender was unreal with 29 points, and yeah, Oklahoma hit 11-of-19 three-point attempts, but it was the Wildcats' offensive inefficiency that cost them the game.

Yet they still should have won.

When Clent Stewart stole a Sooner inbounds pass with six seconds left, was fouled, and then hit 1-of-2 free throws, the odds were in favor of the Wildcats.

But as Lavender's controversial shot showed, you can't take the odds with this year's Wildcats.

K-State can't buy a close win. The Wildcats have lost two overtime games and two others on shots in final seconds. This team could be 7-5 in Big 12 play.

But they're not, and there's no doubt it is wearing on Wooldridge and his team. Wooldridge was uncharacteristically unnerved in his postgame press conference. There could have been so many positives coming out of this game, but there are none. It's just another loss.

Another heartbreaker

Following a last-second call, Oklahoma coach Kelvin Sampson and the Sooner's mens' team run off the court. The Sooners beat the Wildcats in the final seconds when sophomore guard Drew Lavender drove the length of the court to make a buzzer-beating layup.

K-State falls to Oklahoma on last-second shot

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Oklahoma's Drew Lavender caused K-State problems all day, and in the end, it was the 5-foot-7-inch point guard who would deliver the fatal blow to the Wildcats' hopes of snapping their five-game losing streak on Saturday.

Lavender, who had a season-high 29 points, drove the length of the floor and hit an acrobatic shot over K-State's Justin Williams as time expired to give Oklahoma the 69-68 win over the Wildcats at Bramlage Coliseum.

The shot was not without controversy.

Officials reviewed the play to see whether Lavender got the shot off in time. There were also questions as to whether Oklahoma's Taj Gray or Kevin Bookout interfered with the basket or tipped the ball in after time expired.

The shot was ruled good to a chorus of boos from the 10,474 in attendance, and the Wildcats went down for their sixth-consecutive defeat.

Coach Jim Wooldridge said the game shouldn't have depended on the shot.

"I thought there was an inbounds violation to begin the play," Wooldridge said. "We got up on them, and the guy throwing the ball in bounds got caught and stepped across the line, and it wasn't called. I know they saw it; apparently they didn't want to call it."

Though the Wildcats let a 41-28 halftime lead slip away, it appeared as if they still might win with four seconds left.

Point guard Clent Stewart stole the Oklahoma inbounds pass at halfcourt and proceeded to get fouled taking it to the basket by Sooner David Godbold with 4.5 seconds remaining.

Stewart hit 1-of-2 at the free throw line to give K-State a 68-67 lead.

"We made a play there, but not enough of a play," said Wooldridge, who did not let players speak to the media after the game.

K-State shot 45 percent while holding Oklahoma to just 37.5 percent shooting in the first half. The Wildcats also out-rebounded the Sooners 18-14 and committed just two turnovers before halftime.

Coming off a 57-42 loss to Iowa State on Tuesday, Wooldridge said he was pleased with the first-half effort.

"We played harder today," Wooldridge said. "And in the first half, I thought we played as well as we have all year long."

Martin had nine points in the first half and finished the game with a team-high 22 points on 9-of-11 shooting.

The Wildcats also got 13 points from sophomore guard Lance Harris and 12 apiece from sophomore guard Fred Peete and senior forward Jeremiah Massey.

But Massey was limited by second-half foul trouble that eventually led to him fouling out at the 1:04 mark. Harris was held scoreless in the second half and Peete was 4-of-18 on shooting.

The loss was the Wildcats' fourth this season that either came on a shot in the final seconds or in overtime.

"We've been in games this year where our backs are up against the wall and we come back, we come back and we come back," Wooldridge said.

"That's very difficult to do. I think everybody can play energized when things are going well, and it's hard to dig out of a hole."

K-State's Megan Mahoney grabs a rebound under the defense of Colorado's Jasmina Ilic during the second half on Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum. Mahoney scored 14 points and added four assists, breaking the school career assists record.

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It is said that records are made to be broken, and No. 18 K-State had little difficulty proving it Saturday night in the Wildcats' 73-51 win over Colorado.

On K-State's senior night, three of the Wildcats' best in history rewrote the record books once again, as seniors Laurie Koehn, Megan Mahoney and Kendra Wecker each surpassed major milestones in their careers.

Koehn hit five 3-pointers to move her into third place all-time in NCAA history, Mahoney dished out four assists to become K-State's all-time assists leader and Wecker collected 14 rebounds to become the leading rebounder in school history and the first K-State woman to score 2,000 points and grab 1,000 rebounds in a career.

"I think it was absolutely fitting that those three – Laurie, Megan and Kendra – ended their senior night with setting new milestones in the Kansas State record book," Coach Deb Patterson said. "A great honor and a great tribute to them, that on this night, they could achieve those milestones."

With her fourth 3-pointer of the night, Koehn – already the leading three-point shooter in K-State and Big 12 history – surpassed Utah's Julie Krommenhoek for third place in NCAA history.

"It's amazing to think that Laurie Koehn, over the course of the last four years, has been someone that everyone in America knows they have to guard – they lock on her, they put great athletes on her and still, she's found a way to become one of the top three three-point shooters ever," Patterson said.

Mahoney's four assists helped her finish the game with 565 career assists, moving past Mary Jo Miller's K-State record of 562 assists, set in 1992.

Mahoney said the game against the Buffaloes was fun because of how the Wildcats played as a team.

"I think everyone was pumped up, running on some adrenaline," Mahoney said. "We were running and gunning. I think we had a lot of assists, which it's fun when you distribute the ball."

As for Wecker, she added another chapter to her career, as she surpassed former teammate Nicole Ohlde's rebounding record of 995, and went on to finish the game with 1,002 career rebounds, becoming the first 2,000/1,000 player in women's basketball history.

Mo Rocca uses humor to give political insight

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Writer of "All of the Presidents' Pets," performer and fake reporter, Mo Rocca was airborne, literally, Friday to a full audience.

Rocca, after consuming his pre-show Red Bull, leaped across the stage in a blaze of red Fifth Avenue corduroy, while answering audience questions.

"I saw Mickey Rooney twice, and he was better than him," Sandy Grabendike, senior in criminology, said.

His feet sometimes seemed to be detached from his body, as he kicked with all of the bravado of a punk member of the cast of "Cats."

It can only be assumed this was an attempt to appease the audience because of their response to his signature expensive leisure apparel and proposals for him to start a presidential candidacy.

This happened after over an hour of unflinching applause from everyone from professors to longtime "Daily Show" lackeys.

Rocca commented on his previous boss, Jon Stewart, saying, "He is very hardworking – and I mean this seriously, really normal."

"In 'I Love the 70s,' he's hilarious," Eric Davis, freshman in child psychology, said.

"I've (also) learned a lot about the current political situation, the Iowa caucuses and the Republican and Democratic conventions from when they were covering them on the Daily Show."

Rocca said he is going to be filming another episode of "I Love the 90s" this week.

He began his act showing his interest in Kansas culture through Kansas factoids by the county, his knowledge of Kansas caves and his love of the small and plainly majestic Meadowlark.

"I'm nuts about the ornate box turtle," he said of Kansas' state reptile.

Rocca gave some guidance on current political candidates whom he supports: "My money's on Hilary Clinton."

Rocca said this in making light of the drastic right-left swings in recent presidencies.

"If a candidate is funny and makes jokes, I know where they got their constituency," he said in his presentation.

Eric Davis, freshman in child psychology, displayed his "Mo 4 President" sign.

In a time of heavy political criticism, laughter is often the only appropriate response, as Rocca demonstrated in some partially stifled heartfelt chuckles from behind the podium.

Rocca used a podium and Powerpoint presentation showing slides of ShiTzus and John Kerry nearly interchangeably, and a historically endowed transvestite who gave tours of former president Warren Harding's estate – the tour guide dressed as Mrs. Harding down to the funeral veil, a rightly unsettling and accurate portrayal of the former president's wife.

It was also the story which spawned his contract with the Daily Show in 1998, he said.

Even the former senior news correspondent for the Daily Show was taken aback by a hail of cat calls from the back of the room.

Rocca jokingly admitted to wearing a "banana hammock" thong but refused to lose the cords.

"He was better than organic truffles," said Susan Berhow, staff assistant for university publications.

"He was very articulate and knew the capital of every country."

Not all of the Mo lovers were women.

"He's a very political character. I like him," Tyler Smith, secondary education major from Cloud Community College, said.

Rocca commented on his recently published book, "All of the Presidents' Pets."

"It's politics through the eyes of presidential animals," Rocca said as he made references to his cat's intuition into politics.

"I think its really great that he loves politics and is still able to laugh at it," Mike Grey, Penn State graduate, said.

Mo Rocca's book "All the Presidents' Pets" was available for purchase and to be signed on Friday. The book discusses politics and the role presidential pets play in them.

Characters, special effects prominent in 'Constantine'

"Constantine"

Movie review by Marcus Hernandez

John Constantine is not your average do-gooder. He isn't the kind of guy you say hello to as you pass him on the street.

In fact, he isn't a very nice guy at all. Instead, he is a chain-smoking demon fighter who is dying of lung cancer and hoping to send enough baddies back to hell in order to buy his way into heaven, and he may be the world's only hope.

Demons are upsetting the fragile balance of good and evil on Earth, and it is up to Constantine to stop them.

As the film opens, Constantine has been called in to exorcise a demon from a young girl. But this isn't the usual half-breed demon that Constantine is used to confronting. This is a full-on big daddy demon itching to unleash hell on Earth. Constantine manages to cast it back into the abyss but is perplexed at how a full demon could manifest itself on Earth.

Detective Angela Dodson is also perplexed. Her twin sister, Isabel, escaped from a psychiatric ward and nose dived from the top of a building. Isabel was a devout Catholic, and Angela doesn't think she would have committed suicide.

Troubled by this, she consults Constantine who begins to believe that an otherworldly being wants something from Angela.

- Directed by: Francis Lawrence

Constantine is also being hunted – hunted by the minions of a half-breed demon named Balthazar who has a grudge against Constantine.

"Constantine" is one of the coolest movies I have seen in quite some time. Unlike most modern action movies, character development isn't sacrificed for special effects.

We are introduced to a host of cool characters who inhabit a world on the brink of chaos. One such character is Papa Midnight, who is an ex-demon fighter who now owns a club that is neutral territory for all sorts of beasties.

All are outdone in this film, however, by Keanu Reeves as Constantine. Brooding, chain-smoking and grumpy, he is one of the coolest anti-heroes to come along in quite some time.

Reeves taps into something and comes out with his best character to date. Unlike Neo of the Matrix trilogy, who is constantly questioning everything, John Constantine has seen it all and just wishes the world would leave him alone.

Rock star Gavin Rossdale, of Bush also stars as a demon half-breed Balthazar. In contrast with his grunge image, Rossdale is nicely coiffed and attired like a 1930s gangster.

"Constantine" is based on the DC/Vertigo comic "Hellblazer," and director Francis Lawrence and his screen writers are the first team to actually use the mood and tone of an Alan Moore comic to create an interesting world instead of just pulling out characters to serve a lame plot.

First-time director Lawrence has a visual style that buzzes with energy without getting in the way of the story.

Overall, this is one cool movie and the first great movie of 2005. It tells a great story with characters who have style to spare. If you're looking for something cool to watch Friday night, look no further than the coolness that is "Constantine."

'50s teen queen dies

Actress Sandra Dee, the blond beauty who attracted a large teen audience in the 1960s with films such as "Gidget" and "Tammy and the Doctor" and had a headlined marriage to pop singer Bobby Darin, died Sunday. She was 63.

Dee

Dee died at 5:57 a.m. at the Los Robles Hospital & Medical Center in Thousand Oaks, Calif., said Cynthia Mead, nursing supervisor.

She died of complications from kidney disease after nearly two weeks in the hospital, said Steve Blauner, a longtime family friend who represents Darin's estate. Blauner said Dee had been on dialysis for about four years.

"She didn't have a bad bone in her body," he told The Associated Press in a phone interview. "When she was a big star in the pictures and a top five at the box office, she treated the grip the exact same way she treated the head of the studio. She meant it. She wasn't phony."late 1980s.

Steven Tyler, wife split

Aerosmith lead singer Steven Tyler and his wife of 17 years, Teresa, are separating, the singer announced Sunday.

Tyler

Tyler, 56, asked the public to respect his family's privacy in a statement released through the band's publicist, Mitch Schneider.

"Before the tabloid media makes more of this than it is, I am announcing that my wife Teresa and I are currently separated," Tyler said. "We're just a family trying to work through a difficult time. A little privacy and sensitivity — for Teresa, my children and myself — would be nice."

The couple have two teenage children, Chelsea, 16, and Taj, 13.

"Hitch" stays at No. 1

Keanu Reeves went to hell and back, but he could not unhitch Will Smith from the top of the box office. Smith's romance "Hitch" remained the No. 1 weekend movie, making $31.8 million and narrowly beating Reeves' demonic thriller "Constantine," which debued in second place with $30.5 million, according to studio estimates Sunday.

MEMORIAL | Friends, family celebrate life teacher

White said. "This was usually followed by a smirk and a smile."

White said Bloomquist was good at persuading people.

"He was a man with unrelenting social content and he was able to persuade others to see things in a different light," he said.

Even with his strong will, colleagues said he had a sense of humor.

"I once parked next to Len and noticed the bed of his truck was alive with dirt and weeds," Dinkel said. "I was so excited to walk into my office and e-mail him about it. He said he thought it was fitting that a bit of the prairie should come with him every day."

As the first member of his family to attend college, Bloomquist understood students' struggles.

"He recognized barriers and tried to remove them so people could achieve," Sara Fisher, graduate student in the department of sociology, said.

Teaching was Bloomquist's passion.

Dinkel said she will remember what he taught her about life, but what surprised her was what he taught her about death.

"I have never valued him more than when he taught me about dying," Dinkel said.

Even when Bloomquist was diagnosed with cancer, he looked ahead with a smile.

"He remained positive about the future, even in the disease that took his life," Jacque Gibbons, associate professor in the department of sociology, said.

Gibbons said Bloomquist will be missed.

"The university has lost a wonderful teacher and administrator," Gibbons said. "I have lost a truly good friend."

(higher) wages," Tracey said.

Candidate Mark Hatesohl, incumbent City Commissioner, was also vocal about the issue of higher wages for citizens of Manhattan, downtown redevelopment and public transportation.

"I would be in favor of giving higher wages to people who are well dressed and well behaved," Hatesohl said. "People are responsible for making themselves attractive to businesses, instead of trying to suck everything out of the businesses that they can."

Candidate Brad McCune said he is not in favor of a set living wage for businesses.

Emminent domain, the right for the city to move homes if it's in the interest of the public, was discussed relating to re-zoning and preserving neighborhoods.

"Everyone has a price," McCune said. "We can't be everything to everyone."

"At some price, that sentimentality can be bought."

McCune said he is not in favor of having set living wages for businesses.

"Lower paying jobs make people work harder," McCune said.

Both Hatesohl and McCune are in favor of using the private sector in city projects for initiatives such as downtown redevelopment.

Candidate Matthew Schindler discussed Manhattan's past bus systems, which he said shows public transportation is unsustainable.

In order for the city to receive the federal funding necessary to bring transportation to Manhattan, it would have to have a population of 50,000.

speech, said.

There are not enough students filed to fill all positions for SGA elections. The deadline was Friday.

The first way to fill open positions are write-in candidates, he said. Write-in candidates are asked in order of who gets the most votes.

Student Senate Chair Eleri Griffin said senators leave their position throughout the year for various reasons. Some leave to study abroad or graduate early.

If senators have to leave, write-in candidates are the first option when filling the void, she said. Then, college councils get to choose.

"Usually we will ask the college council to appoint a senator to serve that position," Griffin, senior in family studies and human services, said.

Chemical spill causes evacuation

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A chemical spill in Burt Hall forced students, faculty and staff to evacuate the building Monday morning.

Steve Galitzer, K-State associate director of public safety, said in a news release that a research assistant had been conducting an experiment in the biotechnology laboratory with ethel ether when he accidentally broke a gallon bottle of the chemical.

Gary Radke, research assistant, was in the south end of the building at the time of the spill. He said an odor was emitted from the solution and he didn't ask questions.

"It smelled bad, so I got out of there," Radke said.

Galitzer said the spilled solution contained 5 percent ethanedithiol and a chemical similar to the one added to natural gas or pesticides to give it a distinct smell.

According to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, which is a government organization that tries to ensure the safety and health of workers, ethanedithiol is a stable chemical, but it's flammable.

Officials from the Manhattan Fire Department and Riley County Emergency Services responded to the call.

"We had the building evacuated and ran tests to determine the levels to see if it was hazardous," said Pete Heptig, Manhattan Fire Department battalion chief. "After that, we ventilated the building and turned it over to campus facilities."

Galitzer said the building was re-opened around 3:30 p.m. and that Burt Hall had only one class scheduled for Monday, which was canceled due to the spill.

No injuries were reported, but Radke was taken to Mercy Regional Health Center as a precautionary measure.

Legislation would limit junk food in Kansas schools

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas Legislature is proposing a bill that would limit junk food in public schools.

There is one bill in the Senate and another in the House of Representatives.

The bill in the Senate says schools would be required to have healthy foods available to students during the school day. The food in the vending machines would have to meet standards set by the U.S. Department of Education. It was proposed by Sen. Jim Barnett, R-Emporia.

According to the bill, healthy food alternatives would be provided in place of the current snacks. These foods would include bottled water, milk, 100 percent fruit juices, dairy products, fruit and vegetables.

There would also be extra legislation which doesn't include the vending machines and more physical activities and wellness education offered to students in hopes of preventing and reducing childhood obesity.

There is also a similar bill going through the House of Representatives which would remove all junk food from elementary and middle schools and 50 percent of junk food from high schools. There would also be a ban on handing out candy as a reward.

Rep. Tom Hawk, D-Manhattan, said there shouldn't be too many restrictions.

"I think the intent is really good, but I think we need to count on education to have choices," he said. "There are probably a lot of financial implications in this, and I think the board should just allow the educators to make the decisions, not the legislatures."

Barnett agrees with Hawk's statement.

Candidates reminded of election rules

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Candidates met Monday to go over campaign rules.

The meeting was one of two meetings candidates could attend. They are required to attend one, but there is another meeting at 4 p.m. today in the Little Theatre in the K-State Student Union.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said candidates need to attend these meetings so they know what they can and can't do. However, most candidates know the rules.

Legislators considering school funding formula proposals

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Only a little more than a month remains for the Kansas Legislature to fix the K-12 school funding problem.

However, no legislation has been introduced to the Legislature, said Rep. Judith Loganbill, D-Wichita and member of the education committee.

Loganbill said the Kansas House of Representatives has struggled with meeting the April 12 deadline to fix the funding formula.

The funding formula was ruled unconstitutional by the Kansas Supreme Court in December 2003, but no reasons for the inadequate funding were given.

During its 2004 session, the Legislature looked at proposals to fix the funding formula, but nothing was approved.

There are now three proposals for education plans, all of which give additional funding to bilingual education, special education and

Manhattan residents evacuated after fire

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A fire at 420 Colorado St. caused the evacuation of some residents Monday night.

Pete Heptig, Manhattan Fire Department battalion chief, said the malfunction of an electric wall heater was probably the cause of the fire.

The heater was located in the laundry room of Colorado Plaza, a four-story apartment building.

The fire department received the call about the fire at 8:48 p.m.

The first and second floors were evacuated first, Heptig said.

"Once we knew we had the fire out we ceased evacuation because of the condition of some people," he said.

Colorado Plaza is for people 55 years or older.

Alice Phetteplace, regional director for the Plaza and other affiliated complexes, said batteries for smoke detectors are checked semi-annually.

She said there hadn't been a fire at the Plaza before, and the smoke alarms did work.

Heptig said no one had to be taken to the hospital by ambulance.

Students welcome peace plan

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After years of violence, Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon and recently elected Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas agreed to a cease-fire in Egypt on Feb. 8 to end the bloodshed between the warring nations.

Both Sharon and Abbas agreed to end all hostilities targeting Palestinians and Israelis everywhere. This agreement marks what both leaders considered an opportunity to free themselves from their bloody past.

Samer Saleh, graduate student in computer science, knows the horrors of this conflict all too well. He is a native of the West Bank.

"Muslim students, in general, welcome the latest cease-fire between the two sides and view it as a good opportunity to stop the cycle of violence that costs both sides," Saleh said. "However, I believe that many Muslims are cautious about their optimism, since the latest agreement does not clearly define the prospective of the next stage and how it's going to resolve the major obstacles that prevented other agreements from reaching a final settlement."

The main concerns between Israelis and Palestinians are control of Jerusalem, the rights of refugees and border disputes.

Michael Suleiman, professor of political science, said there are also concerns over a Palestinian state as well as Israeli occupation.

"The Muslim community hopes that the latest cease-fire will be the first step toward providing fair and final settlements for both sides, and the Palestinian dream of having an independent state where Palestinians control their own lives on their own," Saleh said.

The conflict seems to be somewhat isolated to the Middle East. Israelis and Palestinians at the K-State level, can live peacefully, even on friendly terms, Saleh said.

"Palestinian and Israelis should adapt to coexist with each other," Saleh said. "The great thing about the U.S. is that it's a free country and people are not judged for their race or religion – Muslim and Israeli students should get along at KSU to support peace in the Middle East."

In response to this shift toward peace, the radical Palestinian faction Hamas said they aren't bound to honor any peace declared by Abbas because they weren't included in negotiations. No matter what concessions are made, Suleiman said, they will be met with disapproval.

"There's no magic in declaring cease-fire," Suleiman said. "You have to work very hard to make sure that it remains in place."

K-State graduation rate low

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Nearly every prospective K-State student hears of the university's academic prestige, how many scholarships K-State students win and how many top colleges reside here. But few of them know that K-State has the 10th lowest graduation rate in the Big 12 Conference.

According to the Education Trust, a non-profit organization dedicated toward improving colleges for students, K-State had a graduation rate of 56.2 percent in 2003, lower than every Big 12 school except Texas Tech and the University of Oklahoma.

This statistic reflects the number of incoming, first-year freshmen who graduate in a six-year period, and reflects the freshman class of 1997.

Though these scores may suggest poor performance, Jeri Stroade, information officer in the Department of Planning and Analysis, said it is important not to jump to conclusions.

Michael Lynch, associate vice president of the Department of Education and Personal Development, said the number does not reflect the quality of K-State.

Lynch said one of the reasons the graduation rate at K-State is low is due to the admissions requirements in Kansas.

"In '97 we were still an open admissions university, while virtually all other Big 12 schools, other than the University of Kansas, had admissions requirements in place," Lynch said.

Provost Duane Nellis agreed.

"Until two or three years ago, we had an open admissions policy. Basically anyone who graduated from high school we let into the university," Nellis said.

Beginning the fall semester of 2001, incoming freshman had to meet at least one of three requirements before entering either K-State or KU: a 21 or higher on the ACT, graduate in the top third of their high school class or complete the Kansas Board of Regents pre-college curriculum with a grade point average of 2.0 or higher.

Before this, a freshman only needed to graduate from an accredited high school to be accepted at a Kansas university. However, students hoping to attend college in Texas must graduate in the top 10 percent and meet additional requirements.

Because Texas has had stricter requirements for longer than Kansas, Texas universities have been accepting higher quality students for a longer time, making Kansas schools have a lower graduation rate.

However, now that the higher requirements are in place, Lynch said K-State's graduation rates will continue to rise.

"We switched in 2001, and what we've seen so far is that our freshman retention value has gone up," Lynch said.

Since 2001, K-State's graduation rate has increased by 3.7 percent, the third highest increase in the Big 12.

Another factor that Lynch said has lowered the graduation rate at K-State are students transferring to other universities.

K-State has a number of pre-professional curricula, such as pre-med and pre-law, which require students to transfer to earn their degrees. These students are counted as dropouts, even though they will probably go on to earn a degree, Lynch said.

According to the Kansas Board of Regents, in 2003 K-State had 224 students transfer to other universities, but in the survey by the Education Trust, these were considered dropouts. K-State also had 184 students transfer in from other universities, who will not be considered graduates.

Nellis said it is important to note the range of scores in the Big 12. The six lowest graduation rates differ by only 7.4 percent, a number Nellis said was statistically insignificant.

"That doesn't provide an excuse for our performance," he said, "but we are in the ball park."

Lynch said the university should leave this statistic alone. One step Lynch said K-State has taken is improved advising.

"Over the last two or three years, we have gradually worked to enhance academic advising, provide more data to advisers on selecting classes, providing more placement recommendations," Lynch said.

K-State has also created the PILOTS program, which helps freshman students get off on the right foot in college. Nellis also said the importance of support programs should be stressed.

"The rate we would like to see improved, but it brings attention to our need to provide support programs more effectively for retention of students," Nellis said.

Overall, Bob Krause, vice president of institutional advancement, said he is not overly concerned about the graduation rate at K-State. He said he didn't think that this statistic alone can be an accurate measure of the quality of a university.

4-Hers discover grains, seeds at K-State

"Don't dump them all in there," she said, laughing as T.J., 11, spilled some of the canola seed on the ground.

Brooke and T.J., along with nine other Wheaton 4-H members, spent Monday in Throckmorton Hall and other campus buildings, learning about soils, crops, grains and insects at the 4-H Hands-On Experience Day sponsored by K-State's Wheat State Agronomy Club.

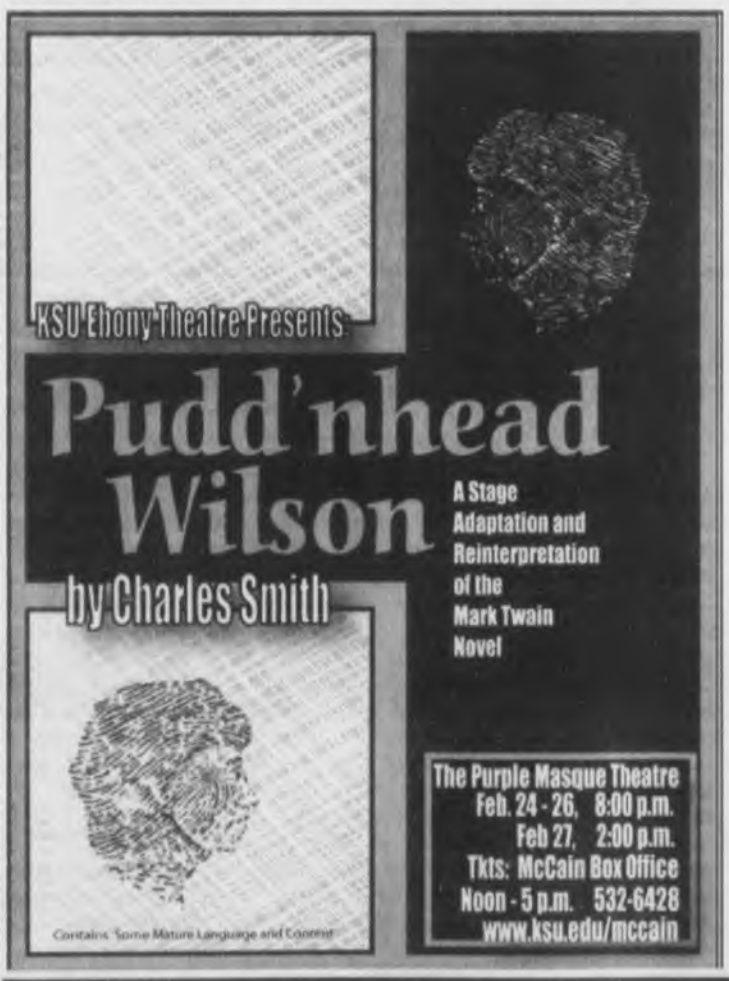
Monica Cowen, senior in agronomy, said the event was a way for the club to reach out to the community.

"We actually did this a couple of years ago and the kids had a lot of fun," she said. "We thought this would give us the chance to give out to the community."

The day's event also served a second purpose for the club, namely at the national level.

Barb Bremenkamp, club president and senior in agronomy, said each year the club goes to a national meeting and enters a poster contest. In November, the club will present a poster, "Growing in Agronomy," featuring pictures of the 4-Hers during the national meeting in Salt Lake City.

Bremenkamp said 15 club members participated in teaching small lessons.



Club members planned a variety of events for the 4-Hers, including a trip to the Insect Zoo, lessons on soil texturing and a crops and weeds identification test – something that Brooke said she wasn't expecting on a day off from school.

"We have a day off of school, and I still had to take a test," she said, noting she correctly answered 10 of the 18 questions.

TO THE POINT

Kids need restrictions on junk food

The Kansas Senate is on the right track.

Public schools need to provide foods with nutritional value for students, which is what the Senate is proposing.

Americans have gotten fatter over the years, which is a problem that needs attention. Kids are not immune to this trend.

Although people are taught that foods of low nutritional value such as chips, candy or pop are bad for them, they still make the unhealthy choices.

Part of the reason these choices are made is due to convenience.

Vending machines are convenient, and if they only contain junk food, junk food will be purchased.

Americans are encouraged to eat junk food because it is given out for a job well done or as an incentive.

Making sure there is good food in schools will lower obesity and illness rates. In other words, people will be healthier.

The bill running through the Kansas House of Representatives is on the right track also.

However, the bill may be too restrictive for starters.

Banning junk food in elementary and middle schools may be the end goal, but it would be too drastic a change.

The change should be made slowly, so students and teachers can adjust. Students still deserve the right to choose, just with more guidance.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Kline is at it again

Attorney General advocates conservative policies in the classroom

SCOTT SEEL

And the Lord God said, "Let creation science be taught in the schools." And it was so, and at the end of the day, God looked down on what He hath created and said, "What the hell did I do that for?"

For God realized that creationism, while a crucial tenant in His religion, had no place being proselytized in American secular schools.

Thousands of years later in the state of Kansas, this lost passage from the book of Genesis is becoming important once again.

This was imminent once right-wing conservative Christians like Clay Center's very own Kathy Martin were elected to the state school board. Everyone in the know,knew Kansas was headed right back towards being the embarrassment of the nation.

Yes, it's time for Volume II of Creation Science: Kansas Style.

Recently, Kansas Attorney General Phill (pronounced: phyl-l-l-l) Kline met with the least-sane members of the State Board of Education to discuss the future of the board.

After this meeting, which may have been held in violation of the Kansas Open Meetings Act, Kline publicly announced his support for a policy requiring stickers to be placed on textbooks declaring that the theory of evolution is a theory, not a fact. Apparently the phrase "theory of evolution" is insufficient in communicating its status as a theory.

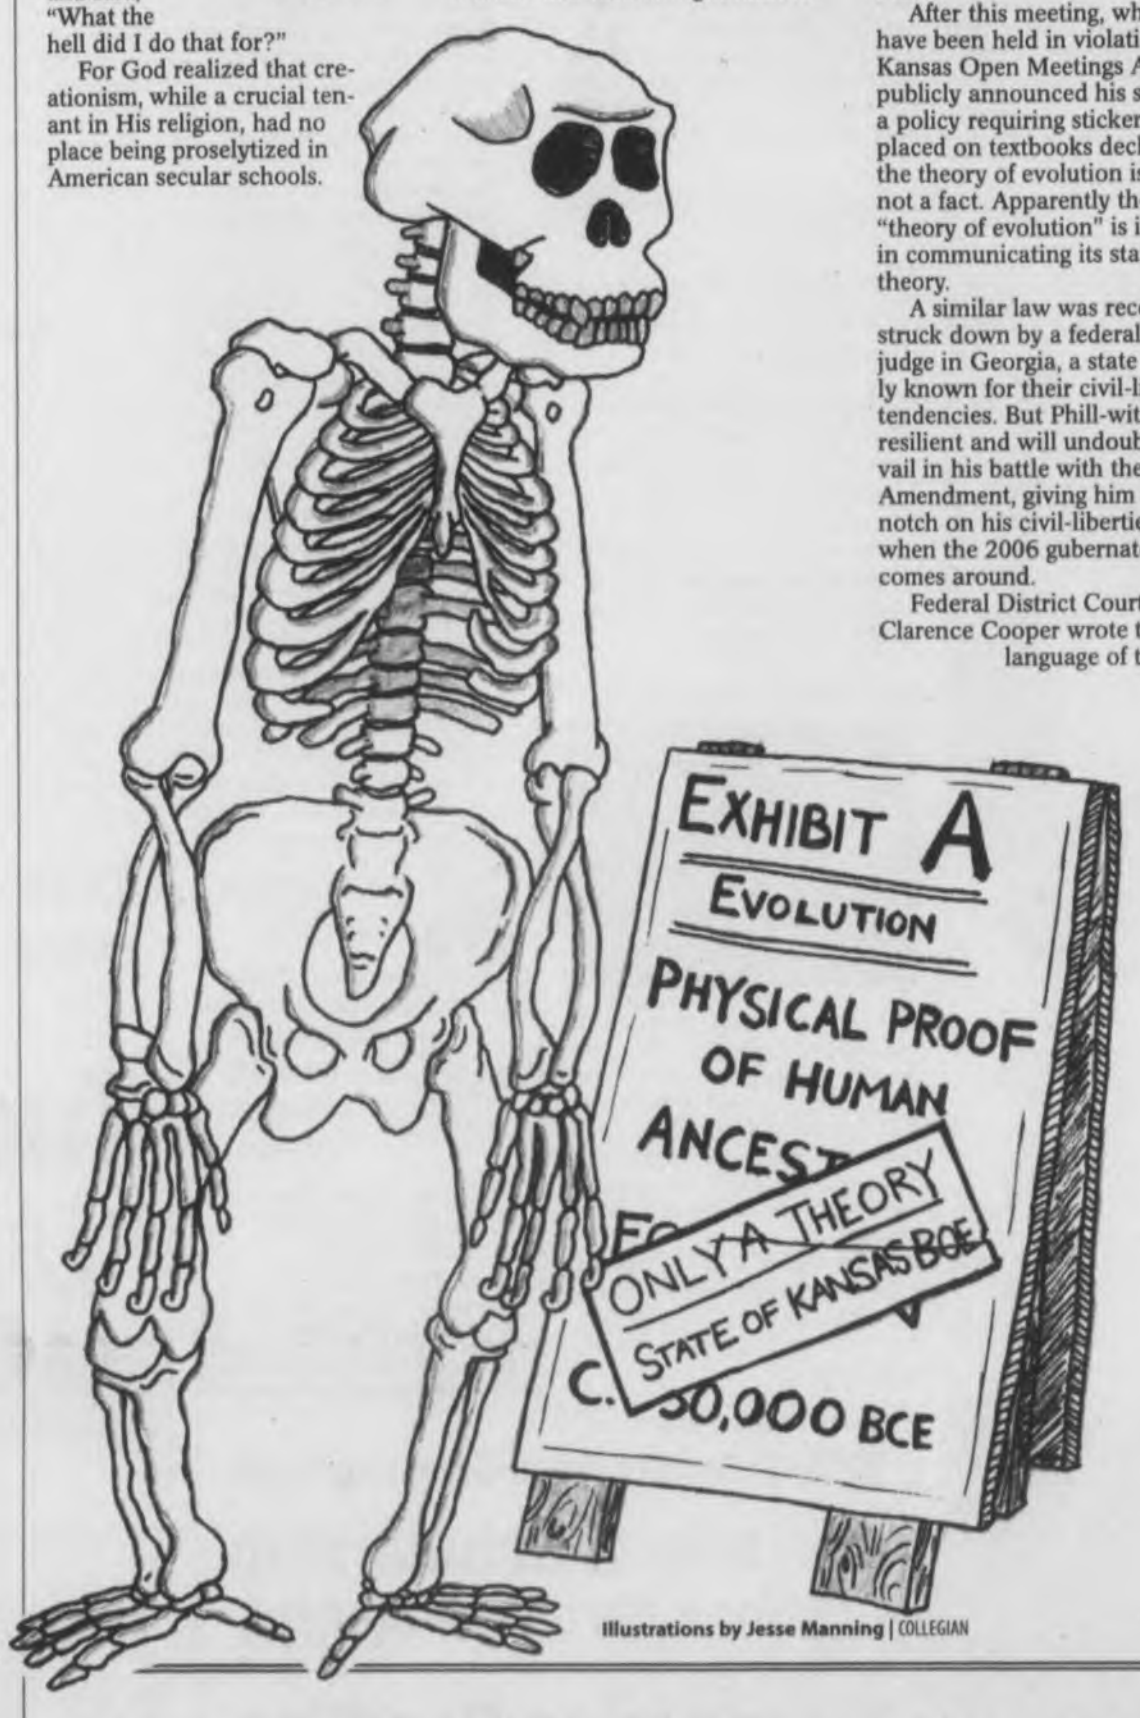
A similar law was recently struck down by a federal district judge in Georgia, a state not exactly known for their civil-libertarian tendencies. But Phill-with-two-l's is resilient and will undoubtedly prevail in his battle with the First Amendment, giving him another notch on his civil-liberties belt when the 2006 gubernatorial race comes around.

Federal District Court Judge Clarence Cooper wrote that the language of the court showed the district was bowing to the desires of a certain religiously motivated group and therefore, "The school board has effectively improperly entangled itself with religion by appearing to take a position."

This statement is clearly a reference to what is known as the Lemon test, stemming from the United States' Supreme Court's 1971 ruling in Lemon v. Kurtzman. This test established a three-pronged approach to determining if a policy violates the First Amendment's Establishment Clause.

Through this test, the government's action must have a legitimate secular purpose, must not have the primary effect of either advancing or inhibiting religion and must not result in an "excessive entanglement" of the government in religion.

I can see no legitimate secular purpose of this policy and it seems to be clear that the policy's motivation is to advance a certain religious viewpoint, or rather inhibit what is believed to be the opposite of that viewpoint.



This case goes beyond the teaching of creationism in schools and becomes advocacy.

To me, it is ridiculous to teach creationism in science class (mostly because it's not science), but this goes the extra step to undermine the theory of evolution.

Yes, evolution is a theory, but almost everything in every science book – including creationism, if it were to be added – is theory rather than a fact. To chose evolution out of all of these theories to be included in a disclaimer clearly furthers a religious belief.

Never mind that Phill-with-two-l's is once again advocating policy, rather than enforcing it. He and his crazy conservative buddies are setting the state up for an expensive court battle and the national embarrassment that is sure to come with it.

If you want to teach creationism in schools, fine. Teach it in a philosophy class. I'm all for the marketplace of ideas and letting students decide, but the government should play no role in advocating any sort of religious belief, Christian or otherwise.

Conservatism hijacks Republican Party, hurts Kansas

JESSE MANNING

Thomas Frank has a beef with Kansas. His observations about how his home state has changed are cataloged in his wildly popular and oft-quoted book, "What's the Matter with Kansas?". Despite the political and philosophical differences that Frank has with Republicans, moderates throughout the state generally agree with his thesis: conservatives have taken over the Republican Party by plucking the moral heartstrings of voters.

Issues like gay marriage, abortion, gun control and teaching evolution in schools have a greater chance of striking voters' nerves than a mundane speech about school finance reform. A "hellfire and brimstone" sermon gets folks fired up and headed to the polls.

The drawback is that these conservatives are pulling the wool over Kansans' eyes. They're feeding voters the same old issues, regardless of whether they're right or make sense.

A perfect example of this type of conservatism in action was last year's race for the 108th House district. Democrat Josh Svaty, the incumbent, faced a challenge from Republican Timothy Null. Much of Null's platform rested on the biggest conservative non-issue: gay marriage.

Null's anti-gay marriage stance won him many adherents. So did his insistence on lowering income taxes. Null claimed that Svaty was nothing more than a tax-and-spend liberal, a label that made it seem as if the Democrats had sent taxes skyrocketing.

Never mind that income taxes weren't raised during Svaty's first term. Never mind state income tax cuts would put an immense property tax burden on rural communities.

Ultimately, Svaty defeated Null on substance. Moderate politicians across the state were not as adept at defending themselves against the traditional conservative assaults.

In the Republican primary, conservative Kathy Martin bested incumbent Bruce Wyatt in a race for State Board of Education, portraying him as a Massachusetts lawyer with a pro-evolution agenda. Moderate-Republican Bill Kassebaum lost his 68th district seat to Shari Weber. Kassebaum was tagged as a tax-and-spender because he was willing to increase taxes for school finance reform, an issue that conservatives are unable and unwilling to deal with.

While conservative candidates win elections with a right-wing social agenda and an all-too simplistic tax message, they're beholden to corporate agendas that fund their attack ads: a unique alliance between low- to modest-income Christian evangelists and the wealthy corporate world. The former hope to see fundamentalist values become law, and the latter to see their bank accounts padded through even more tax cuts.

And, as Thomas Frank argues, the conservatives produce nothing. Their social positions are nothing more than strong ideological stances. Think about it: they control the Legislature, but they don't deliver on their social agenda. If those problems were eliminated, the far right may actually have to find some issues of substance.

It's not necessarily bad to vote on social issues, though Kansans need to reevaluate their priorities. When gay marriage is more important that school finance, something is wrong. When foolishly lowering taxes trumps health care, it is time to evaluate the people holding the legislative reins.

In the run-up to the 2006 elections, watch those conservatives carefully. Ask yourselves if conservative leadership of the state Legislature has made Kansas a better place to live and work. And when Kansans truly vote with their best interests in mind, moderation will make a comeback.

Students gain exposure to high-quality work; Seattle architect displays designs this week

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Seattle-based architecture firm Cutler Anderson Architects will have an exhibit of its works on display for architecture students until Thursday.

The College of Architecture, Planning and Design is currently exhibiting the works from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. through Thursday, in the Chang Gallery of Seaton Hall.

Since James Cutler and his partner, Bruce Anderson, spoke at K-State in fall 2003, the College of Architecture, Planning and Design has been anxiously awaiting the opportunity to display their works, Diane Potts, assistant to the dean of architecture, said.

This marks the final week students will have the opportunity to view the works of this distinguished firm, which has received several National Honor Awards from the American Institute of Architects, as well as more than 40 awards on both a national and regional level.

The purpose of this showing is to expose architecture students to high-quality work, Potts said.

While this exhibit doesn't highlight students' works, Potts said students can still learn by exploring works created by established and renowned architects.

"Students have grown a lot from what they're exposed to," Potts said. "They learn what they like and what they don't. They can learn by example."

Brad Kingsley, fifth-year architecture student, said it's a wonderful presentation, particularly for tectonics and construction-based studies.

He said it is also a chance for students just beginning in the architecture discipline to see where architecture can take them.

Students who aren't in architecture can also benefit from the exhibit, Kingsley said.

Etiquette dinner reservations due

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dining etiquette rules, including which fork to use first, will be explained at the biannual Dining Etiquette Banquet sponsored by Career and Employment Services.

The concept was originally presented to the school by Pat Bosco, dean of student life, seven years ago. Since then the banquet has been highly successful, Marcia Schuley, associate director at CES, said.

The purpose of the banquet is to teach students appropriate manners for dinner interviews. Certain actions may reveal aspects of a student's personality or habits that could cost not only the interview, but also the job.

"When students are interviewing with employers, often they'll be invited to lunch or dinner," Schuley said. "This is not just giving them food, it's incorporated into the interview process. How you present yourself. How adept are you to conversation over the meal? What are your behaviors as you eat? Once you're hired you're representing this company as well."

While the banquet is a learning tool, it has has actually been very popular among students. Daysha Jefferson, junior in food science, said the banquet was a good experience. She said the host joked, but there was also a very professional atmosphere.

For students worried about the time commitment, Jefferson said it doesn't take long.

"It's only an hour," she said. "For an hour, you're learning something that will help you significantly in the future. Education and food, it doesn't get any better."

The banquet will be hosted by Pat Pesci, an instructor in hotel and restaurant management. Pesci's efforts are not just to make students more marketable, but also to teach students lessons applicable in many facets of life.

"Anything a student needs to know to make them more successful," Pesci said. "Anything about a dining interview, the questions they might be asked and the fundamentals of dining. Besides just interviews, it will help them in life in general. Should be some lifelong learning there."

Proper manners during interviews should be taken very seriously, Schuley said.

"Because you are always onstage in the workplace whether eating with your colleagues or clients," Schuley said. "It may be intimidating if you haven't experienced it before."

Salina interest low; filing deadline extended

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State-Salina extended its filing deadline for elections until today.

Adam Volcek, chair of the elections committee at Salina, said there weren't enough students who had filed by the original deadline, which was Friday.

"The original was Friday, but we extended it," he said. "There was just a low number of candidates."

Volcek said the numbers were not necessarily lower than in previous years, but he wasn't satisfied.

"There was not as many as I have hoped," he said.

Salina students can file today by 4 p.m. today at the Office of Student Life, College Center 208C.

Eight students have filed for 19 senate spots. There are also two presidential candidate pairs.

David McCandless, elections commissioner in Manhattan, said K-State-Salina students vote on their own senators and president and vice president, but they also vote on the Manhattan student body president and vice president.

"The main campus president and vice president represent all K-state students, so they represent K-State-Salina, as well," he said.

K-State recruit named McDonald's All-American finalist

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On Valentine's Day, Marlies Gipson received a special gift. The gift, however, wasn't roses. It wasn't chocolates. The gift wasn't even a card. It was better.

Gipson, a 6-foot forward at McPherson High School in McPherson, Kan., received a letter informing her of her selection as a top-100 McDonald's High School All-American finalist.

"I was very surprised and happy," Gipson said. "It was such an honor."

Gipson was one of 2,500 of the nation's top high school seniors selected to have the opportunity to compete in the McDonald's All-American Game, a nationally recognized showcase for the best high school talent.

Once the selection committee chooses 2,500 players, it narrows the pool down to 100. By the end of February, the committee will decide on the top 24 who will compete in the game on March 30 at the University of Notre Dame.

Gipson, currently rated No. 31 in the Blue Star Top Seniors Index, said she was amazed she had been chosen as one of the top 100. According to those close to Gipson, a four-year standout at McPherson who signed with K-State in November, her selection was not a surprise.

Ashley Sweat, teammate and close friend of Gipson, who has committed to K-State for 2006, said she was not shocked by Gipson's nomination.

"She's an amazing player, especially on defense," Sweat said. "She can alter her body like you wouldn't believe."

Gipson, who has a wingspan of 77 inches, is known for her unmatchable defense, her mother, Tammy, said.

"Marlies has great court awareness," Tammy Gipson said. "It's like she has eyes in the back of her head. In Friday's game against Salina South, Marlies had 20 points, 12 rebounds and five blocked shots. That's the eighth game in a row she's had more than five blocked shots."

Although Marlies Gipson is hesitant to speak of her success, Tammy Gipson, who said Marlies Gipson is "very humble," is more than willing to talk about how proud she is of her daughter.

"Marlies works so hard and is so humble," Tammy Gibson said. "She's just such a team player – she isn't in it for herself."

Marlies Gipson, who has been playing basketball since fifth grade, said she has always seen basketball in her future. A highly-touted recruit, Marlies Gipson was pursued by 128 different colleges.

While teams all over the nation, including a few Ivy League schools, were after Marlies Gipson, she preferred to stay in the Midwest.

K-State senior forward Kendra Wecker was named one of the top 30 women's basketball players in the nation, the Atlanta Tipoff Club announced Monday.

Wecker

The selection means Wecker is one of the mid-season candidates for the Naismith Trophy, one of the nation's most prestigious awards, presented annually to the top male and female basketball players of the year.

The list was narrowed down from a preseason list of 50 players that was announced at the beginning of the season.

The four finalists will be announced in March.

LOS ANGELES — Adam Scott made a 4-foot par putt on the 18th hole Monday morning to beat Chad Campbell in a sudden-death playoff at the Nissan Open, the first PGA Tour event in nine years to be cut to 36 holes.

Scott

The playoff came shortly after the final two rounds were canceled because of rain that saturated Riviera Country Club, leaving Scott and Campbell to play for the difference of $386,000.

Scott earned $864,000 and moved up to No. 7 in the world rankings.

Baseball team off to slow start, starting to improve

MICHAEL ASHFORD

The K-State baseball season is under way, and I'd like to take the time to share my excitement about the Wildcats of the baseball diamond.

Currently, K-State is sitting on a 2-3 record, which is a little disappointing considering the hot 19-6 start the Wildcats had last season.

But they are on a modest two-game winning streak after last weekend's games, and I have to believe that head coach Brad Hill and the rest of the team are starting to get things figured out.

At least I hope they are, because the first home game is next week, and I want to see some good baseball.

This year's version of the Wildcats is as talented as it has been in the last few years, which should result in more wins.

The outfield of junior Steve Murphy and seniors Terry Blunt and Josh Dent form the core of a team looking to move up in the Big 12.

Murphy was named All-Big 12 last season, as he led the Wildcats with a team-best .338 hitting percentage with three homers, 14 doubles and 40 RBIs to go along with five outfield assists from his right field position.

He is on an eight-game hitting streak dating back to last season. In K-State's five games this season, Blunt has 10 hits in 21 at-bats for a .476 hitting percentage that leads the team.

There are a lot of new faces on this year's team, but that doesn't mean the talent to win is not there.

Newcomers Jared Goedert, first base, Barrett Rice third base; and Brandon Farr catcher have proven to be valuable additions to the team this spring, as they are hitting .471, .286 and .286 respectively, with seven combined RBIs.

Possibly no position on the team was helped more over the off-season than pitching, as senior Mitch Walter returned from two seasons of injuries to help bolster a staff that lost its top three starters from a year ago in Jim Ripley, Carlos Torres and Brett Bagley.

Walter was an All-Big 12 selection in 2002, and the lefty has already picked up a win this season to go with his seven strikeouts and a 2.45 ERA in two appearances.

The Wildcats are bound to go through some growing pains in Hill's second season in the ultra-tough Big 12, but nevertheless, they should be fun to watch, and they should improve on their 26-30 record from a year ago.

I'll be there on opening day at "The Frank" to show my support. Hopefully, many others will have the same idea.

Equestrian team focuses on details

Riders win 14 top awards at 1st meet

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's English equestrian team had a positive start to its spring season at the Southern Illinois Hunt Show in St. Louis this past weekend.

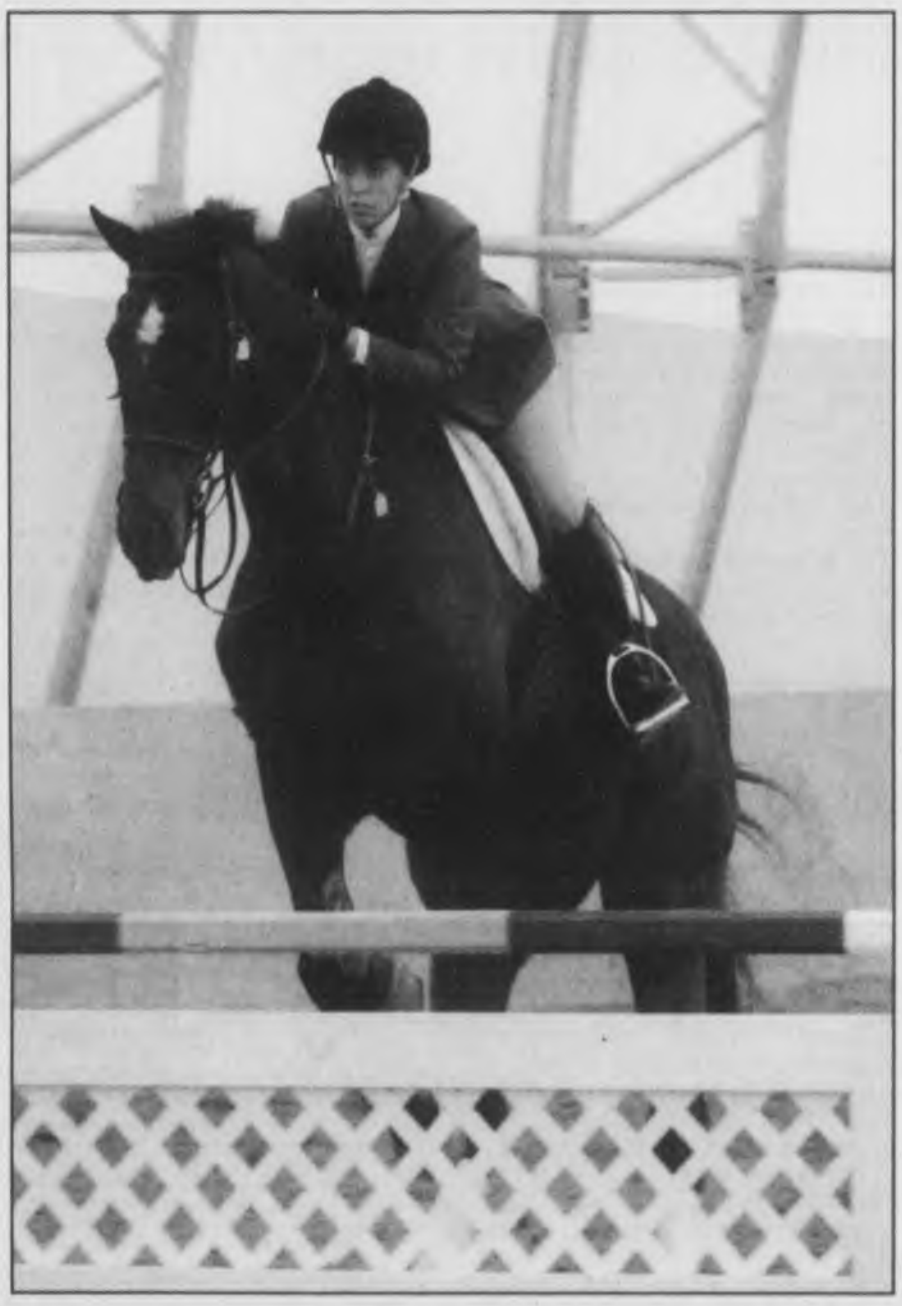
On Saturday, the team won High Point Team honors. On Sunday, the Wildcats couldn't repeat and came in second to Washington University.

K-State finished with 41 points on Saturday and 38 on Sunday. Washington had 34 points on Saturday to finish second and 41 on Sunday.

The team rolled over the competition in the Open Over Fences category on Saturday. Five Wildcats won their respective fence events. Senior Dehlia Burdan came in second in Open Fences B.

Along with winning Open Fences A, senior Allison Woodworth also took home High Point Rider honors on Saturday. She came in second in Open Flat A on Saturday and first in the same event on Sunday.

"I was definitely pleased with my effort," Woodworth said. "But there are still some minor details that I need to work on that will be big details later on in the year."



On Saturday, the team earned nine first place finishes. Winners included Lianna Bodlack in Walk/Trot A, Mica Becker in Walk/Trot/Canter C, Summer Hamil in Novice Flat D, Woodworth in Open Fences A, Erin Mader in Intermediate Fences A, Natalie Bennett in Intermediate Fences B and Jenae Grossart, Christy Conforti and Megan Westberg in Novice Fences A, B and C, respectively.

On Sunday the team had five riders place first. The first place riders were Sarah Waxman in Open Fences A, Woodworth in Open Flat A, Natalie Poholsky in Novice Flat A, Lindsey Morford in Walk/Trot B and Lindsay Cook in Walk/Trot/Canter D.

Head Coach Teresa Slough said the team did very well on Saturday, but she was also pleased to learn what her team needs to work on.

"We had a great day overall (on Saturday), and we especially rode well in the Open Over Fences classes," Slough said. "A lot of riders did well in the Open Flat, but we do have things that we need to work on before we ride at Zone competition in March."

The team's next competition will be at the SMS Western Show during the weekend of March 5 and 6 in Springfield, Mo.

K-State's baseball team traveled to the Texas-Arlington Invitational without a win on the season and returned home with two wins in a row.

Arkansas State took an early lead over K-State, but K-State tied the game in the eighth inning when junior Eric Eymann hit his second double of the day, scoring pinch runner Brett Scott from first.

Arkansas State re-took the lead in the bottom of the eighth and K-State fell to Arkansas State 6-5.

Freshman Daniel Edwards (0-1) took the loss on the mound for the Wildcats after giving up a single run in the eighth.

On Saturday, K-State snagged its first win of the year against Texas-Arlington.

The win was at the hands of senior pitcher Mitch Walter. Walter (1-0) went 6.0 innings, giving up four runs, three earned, on six hits while striking out two and walking two.

K-State came out on top of Texas-Arlington, 5-4.

Sunday gave K-State a rematch with Northwestern.

Adam Cowart (1-0) pitched 8.0 innings, giving up his only unearned run in the first inning while striking out four and giving up no walks.

The Wildcats scored the final run of the afternoon in the sixth when junior Barrett Rice doubled to score junior Eric Durante and give K-State a 4-1 lead.

Follow these wedding etiquette tips when planning the big day

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the spring months approach, many couples are busily preparing for the biggest day of their lives: their wedding day.

Planning a wedding can be stressful, but it's no excuse for bad manners. Brides and grooms should keep wedding etiquette in mind when planning their big day.

Jenne Andrews, owner of Premiere Events in Manhattan, offered some advice to couples to prevent them from committing the biggest etiquette blunders.

DON'T MAKE GUESTS PAY FOR THINGS

Many couples look for ways to cut corners on their wedding and a common tactic is to go without an open bar at the reception. Andrews said couples should offer free drinks, as well as a cash bar, at the reception.

"Not everyone can afford to have a full cash bar for everybody," Andrews said. "But at the same time, they should offer a wine or beer or punch that's complimentary so people don't feel like they have to pay for all of their drinks."

Theknot.com offers the suggestion of having an open bar for only an hour before switching to a cash bar.

DON'T GET TOO OUT OF CONTROL WITH THE REGISTRY

Registering for gifts is arguably one of the things couples look forward to most when they get engaged, but that doesn't mean they can get completely carried away.

Andrews said couples need to remember that not everyone's financial situation is the same, and not every guest will be able to afford $50 pieces of silverware.

"They should always have a variety of prices, so that people who want to give what the bride and groom request, can," Andrews said.

Registering at different places is another suggestion. Andrews said couples should choose some nicer stores as well as department stores such as Target.

DON'T ADVERTISE THE REGISTRY ON THE INVITATION

According to theknot.com, it's never polite to requests gifts from people, including at weddings.

Andrews said that while registry information is okay on a shower invitation, it's not okay for a wedding invitation.

"It's considered a little more tacky on the wedding invitation," Andrews said. "If people want to know, they will ask the parents or the matron of honor or even the bride and groom themselves."

DON'T KEEP GUESTS WAITING

Guests can get cranky if they are kept waiting. Scheduling extra time between hair appointments, meals and whatever else before the ceremony can prevent running late.

The same goes for post-wedding events. Couples choosing to take their pictures after the ceremony should take no longer than an hour, so guests don't have to wait a long time for the reception to begin.

Andrews said guests can get turned off when they have to wait.

"What happens is that when the party does finally start, they want to leave right away," Andrews said.

DON'T FORGET TO PAY FOR SERVICES RENDERED

While some people who are directly involved with the ceremony may not charge a fee, like the officiant, it's considered proper etiquette to pay them.

Rosie Rundell, pastoral associate for Seven Dolors Catholic Church, said couples usually give monetary gifts to the priest and others participating in the service.

"We ask that they contribute something (to the church)," Rundell said. "They usually give monetary gifts."

There are numerous things couples can't control on their wedding day, but their behavior isn't one of them.

Aggieville restaurants difficult to choose from

By Mike Postiglione
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While you've probably driven down 12th Street and noticed Hibachi Hut and Texas Star Café situated next to each other, you'd be surprised to find out how closely related they actually are.

For one, the two restaurants are physically connected; they even share one main entrance and one hostess podium.

Secondly, both restaurants are owned by Four B's, Inc., better known as the Becker family.

"As far as the city is concerned, it's the same land and the same building," said Jared Becker, one of the four family owners, along with his mother, Sandra; his father, Bill; and his brother, Kale. Yet this is where the similarities between the two eateries end.

One of the foremost differences between the two is the particular genre of food you'll find at each place. "Texas Star Café is southwest, barbecue and Tex-Mex; Hibachi Hut is Cajun and Creole," Jared Becker said.

So, once you arrive at that hostess stand, your decision about where to eat can take you in two decidedly different directions.

Just a few days ago, I stopped in at Hibachi Hut to take in a meal – though I have visited Texas Star Café a few times in the past. Some of my favorite choices from Texas Star include the giant smothered burrito – a large tortilla filled with beans, cheese and beef or chicken, topped with melted cheese, sour cream and chili verde ($7.95), and the south Texas BBQ Ribs ($7.95; large, $14.95).

For starters at Hibachi Hut, my date and I ordered the grilled, bacon-wrapped Cajun shrimp ($8.45). Served in a tangy sauce, the shrimp were a tasty beginning to the meal.

For the rest of the meal, my date had a cup of the Cajun gumbo ($3.95) and the gaucho ($6.45). A Hibachi Hut specialty, this sandwich consists of thin-sliced sirloin grilled with mushrooms, onions, green peppers and Swiss cheese and served on fresh French loaf.

My date enjoyed the gaucho, though she only ate half of it, because of the large portion size (that and the fact that we were both saving room for dessert). I had a taste of the gumbo, which was loaded with chicken, sausage, crab and shrimp. It was excellent.

My choice of entrée was the "Po Boy" sandwich, noted on the menu as a "New Orleans tradition." It consists of your choice of catfish filet, shrimp or oysters, served on a French loaf. I chose fried shrimp, topped with lettuce, tomato and a side of tartar sauce. I chose well, as I enjoyed every bite.

As I mentioned, we both saved just enough room for dessert. We decided to go with the chocolate brownie cheesecake ($3.95), which was conveniently advertised right on our table. All I can say is that it was one of the best desserts I have had in Manhattan since I came here five years ago. It was just awesome.

All in all, the meal was thoroughly enjoyable. It was one of my favorite meals I've had in Aggieville this school year, and I usually eat there at least once a week. As we dined, I inquired as to the most popular dishes at the Hibachi Hut.

"The chicken Orleans pasta and the red beans and rice are the two dishes people go crazy over," Jared Becker said.

The ambiences at the two restaurants are somewhat different. Texas Star Café boasts a brighter, more colorful motif, while Hibachi Hut has a cooler color scheme. The Hut is where many people come to sit and chat while sharing a couple rounds of drinks. A well-stocked bar helps Hibachi Hut customers' glasses stay full.

Hibachi Hut stays open late as a bar on Friday and Saturday nights, Jared Becker said. Usually, the crowds are large and diverse, as I've learned from personal experience. One reason might be the number of deals offered on those nights, when drink specials in Aggieville are usually few and far between.

"The most popular drinks we offer are probably the Hurricanes, made with [world famous] Pat O'Brien's mix," Ryan Anderson, bartender said. "Margaritas are ordered a lot and $4.50 Long Island iced teas on Saturday night are popular, too."

There are also affordable pitcher deals on Friday and Saturday evenings.

So whether you're in the mood for a slab of ribs, a plate of jambalaya or a delicious cocktail from the bar, you're guaranteed to find something to your liking at Hibachi Hut or Texas Star Café.

Just don't say I didn't warn you about that difficult decision you'll have to make at the hostess stand.

Since developers drafted a concept plan for the development of the downtown area last August, there has been little visible progress.

The planning committee is waiting to move ahead until a new City Commission is elected, committee chair Jason Hilgers said. Elections will be April 5.

"We have a new commission coming in, and logistically, it made no sense to present it to the commission then later have to orientate new members to the project," Hilgers said.

"If it weren't for that, we might have been able to get started sooner."

Lyle Butler, director of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce, said the developer is in the process of negotiating land and property in the designated development area.

"We still have a ways to go before people see dirt moving," Butler said. "Most of 2005 will be negotiations."

Manhattan is working with Dial Realty, out of Omaha, Neb. Butler said Dial has secured about a third of the total land for the development.

Preliminary expenses are expected to be less than $170 million.

The city is looking at state STAR bonds, which are bonds created from sales tax revenue, as a source of funding.

They are also working on the final development agreement, which will identify the city's responsibilities and the developer's responsibilities under the agreement.

The plan includes developing areas on and around Poyntz Avenue with new stores, hotels and attractions.

The first area of concentration will be north of Leavenworth Street, which they plan to begin work on this summer.

Hilgers said the southern portion of the development will happen further down the road.

That area may include a Prairie Discovery Center which would display educational exhibits from the Smithsonian.

"There are still quite a few factors at play," Hilgers said. "We're trying to estimate when it will start, and we will need the state to participate."

The committee also hopes to establish new businesses along north Third Street. He said they intend to keep the historical quality of the area intact.

"That's certainly a concern business owners and members of the community have voiced," Hilgers said. "And we will work with them on that."

Jan Miller, who has owned Steve's Floral since 1990, said she wants to know more about the development plan.

"Without going to the actual meetings and reading the fine print, you're never really sure if you're informed," she said.

Miller said she plans to meet with other business owners and city officials to get more information.

"For the most part, I think it will be a positive change," Miller said. "I do have some concerns about parking and having enough people to sustain the new businesses."

Hilgers said the development will enhance the downtown area.

"A market analysis showed that we have some deficiencies," he said. "We're going (to discuss) those with the new retailers."

"If the development is done properly, there will be a positive effect," Butler said. "It will create new jobs, bring entertainment like restaurants and movie theaters and create all types of new housing. It will also bring more people to Manhattan. It will provide new opportunities for people."

Hilgers said he didn't expect the development to affect Aggieville or other shopping districts.

"Aggieville is a very unique area with its own clientele," he said. "I doubt downtown really pulls away from that."

For now, the committee will try to wrap up the planning stages to stay on schedule for construction this summer.

"In February and March, we're going to try to hammer out some documents," Hilgers said. "Then we can start a public meeting schedule."

Spam still getting through to Webmail

By Gina Ninemire
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State Webmail accounts are still receiving spam e-mails, despite attempts to block them.

English instructor Wendy Barnes said she often receives unwanted spam.

"I receive spam e-mails on computer software and prescription drugs," she said.

Computing and Network Services has attempted to eliminate spam, Harvard Townsend, director of CNS, said.

"Last August, the Computer Network Services added new protective software to address this specific problems of spam e-mails," he said.

The software detects possible spam e-mails and does not allow them to be delivered through the server. If any of the spam e-mails are able to get through the new software, they are then sent to the recipient's junk folder.

Townsend said this added protection to the K-State servers has helped immensely. He said before the new software was implemented, there were about a hundred spam e-mails getting through the server every day, and now there are only around 20.

Spam e-mails add unnecessary costs to maintaining the K-State server, such as the new software specifically added for the detection of spam e-mails, extra hours for staff to delete these e-mails and added disk space, Townsend said.

Although some still receive spam, Ashley Zeller, junior in advertising, said it hasn't been a problem for her. She said she receives several e-mails from different college departments.

Townsend said that some e-mails might be falsely detected as spam and sent directly to the recipient's junk folder.

Townsend suggests that students and staff members check their junk folders regularly and delete any unwanted messages. After two weeks, the server will automatically empty their junk folders.

"No automatic detection system is perfect, but this system has been doing its job," Townsend said.

HEALTH | Legislators seek restrictions on junk food

comment," Barnett said. "Part of the bill is to develop wellness policies and nutritional education."

Kansas is not the first state to seek the restriction. Other states that have passed similar restrictions include Arizona, Michigan, Kentucky and Washington. Already proposing the limits are Nevada, Michigan and Iowa. Individual school districts have also banned junk food without state legislation.

Barnett said scientific studies were a reason for proposing the bill.

"There are a number of studies that show junk food or foods of low nutritional value contribute to childhood obesity," Barnett said. "We have studies that clearly show that childhood obesity can lead to adult obesity as well."

Barnett said his bill is more hands-on and should go outside of school hours.

"My approach is that we do this on a consensus-building process," he said. "To make this a bottom-up approach as opposed to a hands-down approach: 'This is what you can and can't have.' I don't think that will be a successful approach."

Jim Hardy, assistant principal at Manhattan High School, said the bill is a positive step.

"I think anytime you get students and adults to engage in healthy habits, that's a good thing," he said.

Hardy said in the future, he can see vendors offering healthier choices for the vending machines.

"What we see happening on a national scale is that vendors will adjust and give us more options to put in the machines," he said.

Manhattan High School already has offerings of juices and water in the machines, as well as milk and chocolate milk. The machines are only available for use before and after school and during the lunch hour.

Tanda Kidd, professor in human nutrition, said an occasional snack out of a vending machine wouldn't be a problem, but vendors should try to decrease serving sizes.

"A child can get a bag of potato chips and the next thing you know, it's gone," Kidd said. "If you have smaller packages, you can consume the whole thing and not consume as many calories as in the larger packages."

Kidd said profits could be the deciding factor.

"Having smaller portion sizes or healthier alternatives will help in the long run if it's profitable," she said. "If putting out more money to stock vending machines with healthier alternatives is more expensive, it might not be worth it for the school, because they are losing profits."

EDUCATION | Senate plan to cost $415 million

The Senate committee's plan would phase in $415 million over three years. Another plan would institute a $208-million increase over two years, and the House committee plan would increase funding by $65 million for one year, according to the Associated Press.

Nancy Kole, Lee Elementary School principal and Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 contact for the English as a Second Language (ESL) program, said the proposed money is necessary for programs like bilingual education.

"Any increase in funding is a good thing for our district," Kole said.

Lee Elementary has the most ESL students and teachers in USD 383, Kole said. The formula for deciding how much funding ESL students get is based on contact hours, which are defined as hours ESL certified teachers are teaching ESL students. The funding for these hours is at .2 percent.

"This is a small amount per student, and it's been at this rate for a long time," Kole said. "An increase would be beneficial."

Pam Russell, executive director of student support, which includes special education, said funding is determined by the number of teachers that are in special education.

Russell said the normal amount per teacher is $21,000, and this year is one of the lowest, at $18,500.

What does not get funded by the state, Russell said, is funded out of the general fund for USD 383.

"We really encourage the state to put more toward special education, earmark some money especially for our programs," Russell said.

Bob Shannon, superintendent-elect for Manhattan USD 383, said he is hopeful the Legislature will devise a funding formula that increases funding for K-12 schools. He said the legislators will have to make substantial changes.

"I am optimistic that the Legislature is going to be representative of the will of Kansans and the interests of the children. They will do what is necessary and right to move forward," Shannon said.

The House of Representatives Select Committee on School Finance had a hearing Monday and will continue today, Loganbill said.

The Kansas Association of School Boards wrote in a statement dated Jan. 3 that its members agree with the decision made by the Supreme Court.

"KASB does not believe that suitable funding requires or will be solved by reallocating funding among school districts or within school district budgets," the statement said.

The statement encouraged the Legislature to solve the budget formula before the deadline.

In the Supreme Court's ruling, it said, "the Legislature, by its action or lack thereof in the 2005 session, will dictate what form our final remedy, if necessary, will take."

The ruling also said that the current funding formula "increases disparities in funding, not based on a cost analysis, but rather on political and other factors not relevant to education."

Shannon said the current formula does not keep up with the cost of living.

"Committees, elected representatives, teachers and administrators have been wrestling with a solution to this for years. I don't have a fixed figure, but I know from being a practicing school administrator that the current situation is not fair," Shannon said.

ELECTION | Campaign expense reports due Monday

Election regulations can be found at www.ksu.edu/elections.

Candidates are not allowed to chalk on steps or use permanent materials for campaigns, and they can't attach posters to trees by nails. Most use string as an alternative.

Active campaigning, which would include people handing out campaign merchandise, is not allowed in academic buildings or near residence halls.

Students can actively campaign outside, but they can't hassle students. In other words, if a student says "no" when asked to take campaign material or donate money, campaigners must leave them alone.

Campaign tables are only allowed in the Union.

Presidential candidates can set up tables from Thursday until March 2 for the primary elections, which are March 1 and 2.

All candidates can set up tables for the general elections, which are March 8 and 9, from March 3 until March 9.

If candidates violate some regulations, any student can report the violation by completing a Violations Complaint Form.

These are found on elections Web site or at the OSAS. Completed forms are to be turned into OSAS, which is on the ground floor of the Union.

McCandless will review all complaints.

"If there's sufficient evidence to support a complaint I'll take action," he said.

If McCandless decides there is enough support, it depends on whether it is a minor or major violation.

"If it's a minor violation, I just take care of it," he said.

Candidates can be fined up to $10 for minor offenses. The Elections Review Committee handles major offenses and determines the punishment, which could mean disqualification from the race.

Expense reports for candidates were also discussed at the meeting.

Candidates have to keep track of how much they spend, where they spend it and who gives them money.

McCandless said everyone has to fill these out, regardless of how much goes into their campaign.

"Whether or not you spend any money, you have to file an expense report," he said.

This was changed from last year, when it was the Friday before, so candidates can have through the weekend to spend money, McCandless said. The deadline, however, will be more strictly enforced because of this.

"We have a lot more compressed time, so we are going to be a lot less lenient," he said.

GIPSON | Recruit excited about KSU opportunity

Colorado, Texas, Kansas, K-State and Nebraska," Marlies Gipson said. "In the end, I really liked the family atmosphere at K-State – the coaches, players and fans were all great."

Tammy Gipson said she and her daughter were impressed by Wildcat coach Deb Patterson, her coaching staff and K-State.

"I was amazed by how genuine the K-State players, coaches and people in general were," Tammy Gipson said. "We went down to Texas, and all they were concerned with was showing everything off. At KU, we were treated more like objects than people."

Gipson said she is happy with her decision and is excited to play at K-State next year.

"My goal is to just find a way to fit in with the team next year," Marlies Gipson said.

Despite Gipson's anticipation for the future, she can't look too far ahead. She still has three months of high school remaining and a state title to contend for in the next few weeks.

With a current 18-0 record, Marlies Gipson and McPherson's four other seniors, who have played together since fifth grade, are hungry for a state victory. The McPherson Bullpups have made it to state three consecutive years and the championship game the past two, but have yet to come away victorious.

"They've been bridesmaids two times," Tammy Gipson said. "Maybe this year it's time to be the bride."

Regardless of state, Marlies Gipson's future in basketball still looks bright. At the end of February, she will be notified if she is one of 24 selected to compete in the McDonald All-American game.

"Even if Marlies doesn't get picked to play in the game, it is still such an honor to be considered one of the top 100 in the country," Tammy Gipson said.

Man charged with attempted murder

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An 18-year-old man was charged with attempted first degree murder this weekend.

Joshua Reeves, 2746 Maplewood Circle, was arrested at about 4:30 p.m. Saturday. His bond was set at $100,000.

Capt. Gary Grubbs, with the Riley County Police Department, said there was a domestic heated argument between Reeves and another man in which a life was threatened.

He said the argument was over a female.

Grubbs said the victim's name could not be released because it is protected.

Reeves also is suspected as the the thief in a related crime, Lt. Mike Quintanar said.

Aaron Thompson, 811 El Paso Lane, No. 1, reported his Remington Shotgun, five videos and two DVDs stolen. He filed the report at 8:53 a.m. Sunday.

Quintanar said Thompson may not have known his gun was missing until later.

Grubbs said Reeves had the shotgun and had purchased shells for it, which is part of the reason Reeves was arrested.

Jurors watch professor's interview

By Bailey DeReus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jurors in Thomas Murray's murder trial watched taped testimony Tuesday afternoon.

The taped testimony, from November 2003, showed Murray, a K-State English professor accused of killing his ex-wife, talking to police officers days after Carmin Ross was found dead in her Lawrence home.

In the tape, Murray told a police officer about his and Ross' relationship, including how they met, the stability of the relationship and what brought about their divorce.

The two were in mediation sessions Nov. 11, 2003, just three days before Ross' beating and stabbing. The mediation sessions were necessary in order for them to resolve the custody dispute over their 4-year-old daughter.

The two met in Columbus, Ohio, where Murray taught at Ohio State University. Ross was in Murray's class in spring 1984 and the two were married in June 1985.

In 1988, the two moved to Manhattan and Murray started

A time to remember

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Black history month gives students a time to remember prominent black leaders who haven taken their talent and education a step further. Here are a few who graduated from K-State.

JOHN BROOKS SLAUGHTER

When engineering students walk by Fiedler Hall library, they are likely to see a photo and a brief history of a man who has made a name for himself in the world of engineering.

John Brooks Slaughter graduated from K-State in 1956 with a bachelor's degree in electrical engineering. At the time, Brooks was the only black man to graduate from the College of Engineering.

After graduating from K-State, Slaughter went to the University of California and earned a master's degree in engineering and a doctoral degree at the school.

According to the National Action Council for Minorities in Engineering Web site, during Slaughter's career, he has been an electrical engineering professor at the University of Washington, the academic vice president and provost at Washington State University and a professor of leadership in education at the University of Southern California. Slaughter was named to the American Society for Engineering Education Hall of Fame in 1993.

Slaughter is currently the president and CEO of the National Action Council for Minorities in Engineering Inc.

On Oct. 3, 2004, Brooks returned to K-State to receive the Buche Award.

During his acceptance speech for the award, Slaughter said when he was younger, most blacks were not encouraged to achieve in engineering, but he got the ambition to succeed from his parents. He said at NACME that he is working to increase the number of minorities in the field of engineering.

During a recent visit to campus, he said it was great to see the number of black and Latino engineering students who were succeeding in the college.

EARL WOODS

Best known as the father of Eldrick "Tiger" Woods, Earl Woods graduated from K-State in 1953.

According to the University Archives, Woods was the first black athlete to play baseball in the Big 7 Conference. During his time at K-State, he had to face racism not only from his peers in the classroom, but also from, teammates.

Woods did not play golf at K-State because the local golf course at the Manhattan Country Club did not allow minorities to play. This has since changed.

In 2002, the K-State golf course management and research foundation named its academy the Earl Woods National Golf Academy.

VERYL SWITZER

Veryl Switzer was said to have a talent that enabled him to cross racial barriers.

The Kansas Sports Hall of Fame web site said Switzer was considered one of the best two-way athletes to play football in the Big 7 Conference. He was inducted into the Kansas Sports Hall of Fame in 1990.

According to the web site, at K-State, Switzer lettered three years in football and track and was on the all-Big 7 team for three consecutive years. He was a second-team all-American in 1951 and 1952 and was first-team Pro Football Coaches All-American in 1953. During his senior year at K-State, he led the nation in punt returns.

He was also the Big 7 indoor long jump champion in 1952.

Switzer played for two seasons with the Green Bay Packers and was in the Air Force from 1956 to 1958. Switzer retired in 1960 after playing for three seasons with the Canadian Football League.

While he was assistant director of athletics and student athlete life skills at K-State, Switzer started Upward Bound at K-State, a program that helps recent high school graduates who were participants in the program in high school to go to college by paying for the first six hours of tuition at K-State. He saw more than 1,000 people participate in the program in 17 years.

SHANTÉ MOORE

Shanté Moore graduated from K-State in 1996, earning his bachelor's degree in political science and Latin American studies. During his time at K-State, Moore was chairman of the Mortar Board public relations committee. Mortar Board is a national senior honor society.

In 1996, Moore was a Truman scholar at K-State.

After graduation, Moore

GlobalFlyer takeoff delayed again; weather forecast still unclear

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's going to be at least another week before millionaire adventurer Steve Fossett takes off on what he hopes will be a record-breaking flight around the world.

Fossett said Monday he might be able to take off in his GlobalFlyer from Salina on Friday or Saturday, depending on weather conditions.

But on Tuesday, he said weather forecasts call for unacceptable ground winds at Salina's airport and turbulence during his ascent.

Fossett's next window for a take off is March 1-3.

GlobalFlyer

K-State-Salina is participating in an attempt by a GlobalFlyer airplane pilot to fly solo around the world without refueling.

The single-engine GlobalFlyer will be loaded down with fuel when it takes off and needs prime weather conditions to get safely airborne.

Salina's airport was chosen because of the city's central U.S. location and because of the airport's two-mile runway.

Fossett, who already holds several records for endurance trips by balloon, jet, glider and sailboat, wants to become the first person to make a solo flight around the world in an airplane without stopping to refuel.

Oregon underwear thief in custody

Kim graduated from WSU with a degree in genetics and cellular biology in 2001, according to the Oregonian newspaper.

The 30-year-old Kim has been accused of stealing more than 3,400 pairs of women's underwear at Oregon colleges since 2001.

Police caught Kim in his Tigard, Ore., home with the stash of underwear in May 2004. He was charged with theft in Benton, Multnomah, Yamhill and Washington counties in Oregon.

The underwear thefts were reported at at least six Oregon colleges, including Oregon State University, Linfield College, George Fox University, Concordia University and the University of Portland. The thefts were from laundry rooms in residence halls and apartment complexes.

Kim is also faced with child pornography charges in Washington County. Officers inspecting his home computer for evidence found child pornography, in addition to over 40,000 pornographic images of women being tortured and mutilated, according to court documents.

For several months, Kim was considered to be a prime suspect in the disappearance case of Brooke Wilberger. Wilberger, a Brigham Young University student working over the summer in Corvallis, Ore., vanished May 24 from an apartment complex near Oregon State University where she was working changing outdoor lamps.

Some of the underwear and dryer lint found in Kim's home was determined to have been taken from the apartment complex from which Wilberger disappeared.

There were several reported cases of underwear theft during the time that Kim attended WSU, said Steve Hansen, chief of WSU Police Department. But those cases may not be significant to the Kim case.

"It would only be significant if there were a lot of outstanding cases up here and we could link them to him," Hansen said. "We get a lot of clothes thefts reported."

Kim is in custody in Oregon. The first trials will take place in Yamhill County, Sassaman said.

ODD JOBS TO PAY BILLS

NORMAN, Okla. – Scott Mason, junior in political science, has the perfect weekend gig. For the past three years, Mason has been the voice behind University of Oklahoma baseball.

"The starting lineup is my favorite part of the game," he said. "Coach [Larry] Cochell does a little twirl of his fingers and that Ozzy [Osbourne] song 'Crazy Train' starts playing, and you kind of know what part to come in on."

As tuition and living expenses increase, work is becoming a necessity for many college students. About 75 percent of students work, according to the 360 Youth College Explorer Study, released in August 2004 by the online company Harris Interactive.

While countless students work their way through school as gas station attendants and waitresses, other students are finding more creative and unusual ways to earn while they learn.

For Amber, a junior at OU who requested not to have her last name published, it all began with a newspaper ad she saw last semester.

Amber is an egg donor and said in an e-mail interview that she doesn't want many people to know about her unique way of earning money for school.

"I saw an ad in a newspaper – and I kind of laughed about it," she said. "Then I looked into it and thought it was very interesting."

Amber said she received $3,500 dollars for her eggs, plus the cost of her medical expenses. She used the money to pay for her tuition at OU.

For Hannah Waller, senior in zoology and biomedical, one unique job wasn't enough. She has two.

Flag twirling and saving the lives of local pets are all in a day's work for Waller. She divides her time between school, instructing the OU color guard and working full-time as a veterinary assistant.

Waller assists a veterinarian during surgery and draws blood samples from animals, among various other duties, at All Pets Animal Hospital.

She has cared for a variety of animals, ranging from cats and dogs to goats, lizards and squirrels.

"We've seen it all," Waller said.

One of the strangest incidents she remembers came when extracting a pair of panty hose from the intestinal tract of a sick Dalmatian.

Manhattan Airport receives grant

Federal money covers cost of control tower construction

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan Regional Airport was granted $489,204 on Tuesday for the construction of an airport traffic control tower.

Out of the $4.7 million in grants that Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., secured for Kansas airports, $500,000 went to Manhattan. The grants were awarded by the United States Department of Transportation.

Manhattan Regional Airport director Russ Johnson said that the tower was built in July 2002, but the grant is a reimbursement of the cost of building the tower.

The grant was part of the Airport Improvement Program, which is provided by the Federal Aviation Administration.

The program assists in providing grants to public agencies, private owners and entities for the planning and development of public airports.

The FAA generally covers about 90 percent of project costs for small airports like Manhattan's.

FAA Grants Programming Specialist Lorna Sandridge said that eligible projects include those improvements related to enhancing airport safety, capacity, security and environmental concerns.

Johnson said that the airport traffic control tower meets these standards because it helps in efficient movements in and out of the airport.

"We use the traffic control system every day. There are controllers on staff 14 hours a day to provide essential safe service," he said.

The control tower is only one of many new projects the Manhattan Regional Airport has in mind.

Sen. Roberts is awarding $1.3 million for airfield lighting improvements that could further benefit the airport. The airport is currently is process of going out for bids on the grant and hopes to bring it home to Manhattan.

There is a list of applications the Manhattan Regional Airport has filed, but is unable to claim until there is a congressional release.

Johnson said that Manhattan continues to apply for grants for the airport so that improvements can continue to be implemented for years to come.

Boeing sells commercial plants

By Roxana Hegeman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Boeing Co. on Tuesday sold its commercial aircraft plants in Kansas and Oklahoma to a Toronto-based investment group as part of the company's strategy to focus on design and final assembly.

Onex Corp. bought Boeing's commercial aircraft facility in Wichita, along with plants in Tulsa and McAlester, Okla., for about $1.2 billion. The Chicago-based aerospace giant has been trying to sell the plants for more than a year.

"Starting from a great foundation, our objective is to build the most efficient and innovative company in the aerostructures industry," Seth Mersky, a managing director of Onex, said in a statement announcing the sale. "There have been terrible job losses at these plants over the last several years. We confidently believe that can be reversed."

Boeing is Kansas' largest private employer. About 7,200 people work at the Wichita commercial plant, along with as many as 1,300 at the two smaller facilities in Oklahoma. Boeing's defense operations in Wichita, which employ about 5,000 workers, are not involved in the sale.

Separately, Boeing announced the sale of its Rocketdyne rocket engine subsidiary to United Technologies Corp., parent of jet-engine maker Pratt & Whitney, for about $700 million in cash. Rocketdyne has sites and assets in California, Alabama, Mississippi and Florida and 3,000 employees.

Onex is paying Boeing about $900 million in cash and is taking on about $300 million in liabilities.

The deal includes long-term agreements for Onex to provide Boeing with parts – including fuselage sections and wing elements – on four of Boeing's existing planes and the new 787 Dreamliner, the company's next-generation jet. Mersky said Onex plans to invest $1 billion in Kansas and Oklahoma in the next few years and plans to seek business with other aircraft makers.

More pairs file after extension

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More students filed for K-State-Salina student elections after the deadline was extended – including a presidential pair.

Friday was the original deadline, but it was moved to Tuesday to encourage more students to file, Adam Volcek, chair of the elections committee, said.

"I'm happy that a lot more filed today," he said.

Now that there are three presidential pairs, there will be a primary, Volcek said.

There will be debates for presidential pairs and one for pilot senator, since the office is now contested, he said.

"There are more candidates than positions, so we'll be able to have a good debate for at least the pilot section," Volcek said.

The deadline was postponed because few students filed.

"The word didn't get out as much as it should have," he said.

Volcek said there may not have been as much interest as there has been in the past.

"It kind of depends on if there's anything of importance up in the senate," he said. "There hasn't been a very heated debate recently."

Vice President Josh Koch said there are generally a few open spots after everyone has filed.

"It's been a problem before," he said.

Sometimes write-in campaigns claim open positions, he said. If that doesn't work, an additional election can be held in the fall.

"That gives them kind of a second opportunity of experiencing SGA first hand by being in it," President Doug Zerr said.

Zerr said student government decides how privilege fees are spent.

"The students decide where that money needs to go," he said. "It's basically the venue through which the student voice is projected from."

Telefund falls short of goal

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Arts and Sciences is short of its goal for the 2005 Telefund.

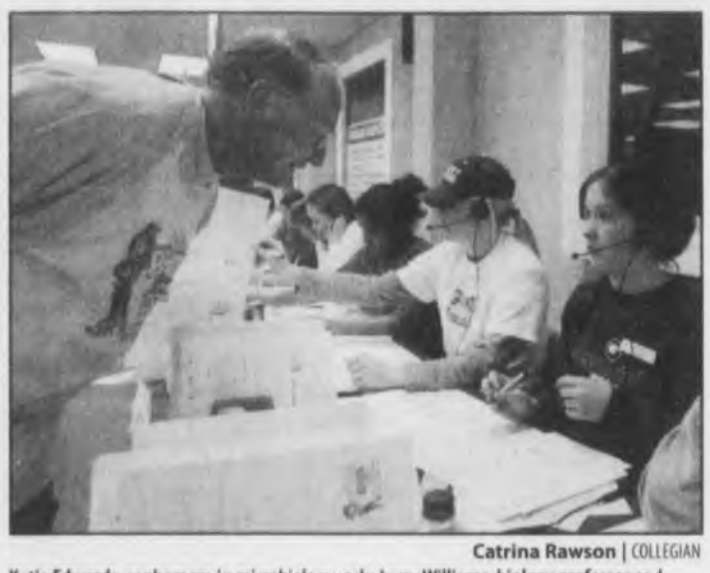
Volunteers will call again tonight during a make up period to try to accumulate more pledges.

Alison Wheatley, assistant dean in the College of Arts and Sciences, said the college has about $278,000 in pledges, $7,000 short of last year's goal of about $285,000.

The 2005 Telefund has raised more than $1.33 million. Since 1980, Telefund has raised more than $18 million.

Although the college has no set goal in mind, each year it looks to improve on the previous year's goal, Wheatley said.

It is a mystery why the college hasn't reached its goal, Wheatley said.



"We've actually had volunteers filling our seats almost every night for Arts and Sciences," she said. "It's unpredictable what financial state our alums are in and how much they will be able to contribute."

Gordon Dowell, director of annual giving and Telefund, said there are still alumni from the College of Arts and Sciences that need to be called.

"We have a huge stack of cards. They haven't called all the people in that stack," he said.

However, Wheatley said the alumni on the cards have been called, but they have not been contacted because they didn't answer the phone or they weren't home.

The money that is raised from the Telefund for the College of Arts and Sciences funds scholarships for the college, Wheatley said.

- Call Jamie in the College of Arts and Sciences Dean's office at 532-6900

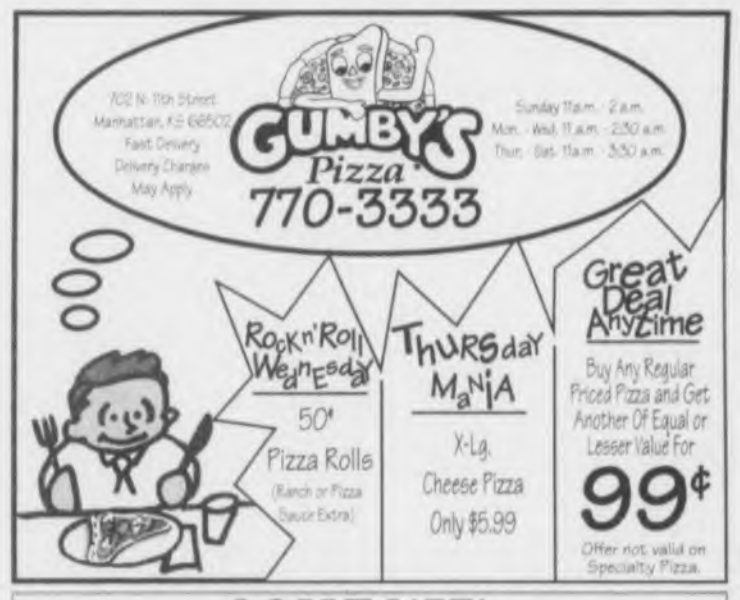
"We are always delighted to be able to award scholarships and continue scholarships based on this funding because we have few other ways of raising the funds," she said.

It is not uncommon for colleges to have make up days, Dowell said.

The College of Engineering held a make up day Sunday because it did not reach its goal during its calling period.

Richard Gallagher, associate dean for academics and administration, said after the make up day, the college was able to beat last year's pledge totals by about $1,000. The College of Engineering's Telefund pledge total is now $282,310.

About $9,600 was raised during the make up calling night, Gallagher said.



Although the College of Arts and Sciences is short of its goal now, Wheatley said it is still possible to achieve it.

"I don't think the goals were unrealistic at all, which is why we have high hopes we will reach them," she said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Colleges rely on students, alumni alike

During the 2005 Telefund, two colleges didn't meet their pledge goals during their scheduled calling time. While the College of Engineering surpassed last year's total during its make-up day on Sunday, it is still uncertain if the College of Arts and Sciences can do the same tonight.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The lack of pledges accumulated can't be blamed on the Telefund volunteers who have been filling the seats each night to make calls, but on the amount alumni are willing to give back to the university.

Although colleges look to improve on their totals from previous years, which requires more pledge money to be raised, alumni should be able to increase the amount pledged.

They should remember that the alumni before them helped support their endeavors at K-State and strive to have that same desire to support current K-State students.

Current students should take into account that Telefund money funds scholarships for their colleges and departments.

While students may depend on alumni for support now, it is important that we remember to give back when we are alumni.

It is essential that students and alumni both take into consideration what the generation behind them will need, as we are all dependent on the generation ahead.

Great divide

Western culture more individualistic compared to East

Illustrations by Sara Kissick | COLLEGIAN

There's an interesting poster that hangs outside my adviser's door. Taken from an apartment complex in Hong Kong a few months ago, the innocuous little placard features the picture of a mosquito and a stern warning written in Chinese, English and Hindi.

DAVID LIANG

My American roommates found this wildly hilarious. Partly because of poor translation (believe me, the Chinese version doesn't sound nearly as corny) and partly because of the emphasis of destroying the mosquitoes "together."

For me, this incident highlighted an important cognitive difference between two vastly different cultures: Western cultures tend to be more individualistic, while their Eastern counterparts are more collectivistic. This is often highlighted by sociologists and psychologists, but is not generally well-known by the public.

In the West, people generally regard themselves as unique individuals within a society to which they have little or no social obligations. In fact, people feel positively annoyed if they feel their individuality is threatened. As a result, Westerners are more oriented towards personal goals of success.

However, East Asians (people from Japan, Korea, China and other Sinic countries) tend to place more emphasis on teamwork and the overall success of the group of which they perceive themselves to be part. Success is sought as a team rather than a personal badge of merit.

One of the most interesting cross-cultural studies done on this subject was conducted in 1993 by Charles Hampden-Turner and Alfons Trompenaars. Both professors at an international business school in Holland, Hampden-Turner and Trompenaars handed out surveys to managers around the globe.

Respondents were asked to indicate whether they preferred A) a job in which individual objectives were achieved and rewarded for personal initiatives or B) a job in which no one was singled out for personal honor and the team was rewarded as a whole.

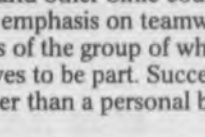
The results were intriguing. More than 90 percent of the managers from America, Britain and Australia chose the first option, compared to only about 40 percent of the managers from Japan, Singapore and Korea.

The ramifications of this study extend far beyond the business world. It would explain, for instance, why liberal democracy as we know it today comes more naturally to western countries than East Asian ones.

Since Westerners are inclined to believe that individuals are separate units within a society, it would only make sense for each person to be entitled to certain rights and freedoms.

But there's a much less developed sense of "individual rights" among Asians, and any conception of rights is based solely on the individual's "share" of the total rights in the collectivity. This is largely why so many Chinese people find the western concept of "human rights" to be a very fishy one.

To Westerners, East Asian governments may sometimes appear excessively paternalistic or even downright dogmatic, but they fail to take into account that Asian societies are inherently more socialistic. Conversely, East Asians are often shocked at how much disorder, crime and plain nonsense Western countries are willing tolerate in the name of personal freedom.



Having lived in both cultures, I can't honestly say that I prefer one over the other–both have their merits and shortcomings. Perhaps as globalization takes hold and nations are drawn together, both cultures will gradually be integrated into one that combines the best of both worlds. My cynical side tells me that will never happen. But, hey, it never hurts to hope.

Changing the world

Dressed in red hats, purple clothes, feather boas and fake diamonds, a group of women are slowly taking over the world. Their organization now boasts nearly a million members in 25 different countries and adds 500 new chapters every week.

JULIA STOSKOPF

Their revolution does not pertain to political oppression; instead, it is simply a response to the fact that society praises the young and ignores the old. America treats old age as a slowing of the mind and the body, but this organization has arisen to change that perception.

"It's senior women having play dates," according to the Oct. 22 Washington Post.

With chapter names like the Purple COWS (Crotchety Old Women's Society), the Red Hat Mammas and the Bodacious Borealis Babes, the members of the Red Hat Society are proving that girls really do just want to have fun – no matter their age.

The organization has two requirements for membership: a member must be a woman and she must be over 50. These two conditions aside, the organization is open to all women from all walks of life.

These women, the majority of whom have worked their fingers to the bone their entire lives serving other people, do not discriminate, riot or file frivolous lawsuits against McDonald's. Instead, they've taken all that life has thrust at them – including a perception that they are now old and no longer fun and exciting – and turned around and thrown a pie in its face.

Sharon Pauley, Queen Mother of the Boone's Southern Belles Red Hatters, summed up their goals in the Nov. 15 Associated Press: "My health is not good. I'm on disability. I have a pacemaker. I have a lung disease, but that's not going to stop me from having fun and living life. That's the main message."

Even if you're under 50 or male, listen to the Red Hat Society. Instead of whining and complaining about how busy we are, how stressed we are, even how hungover we are, we should all just go out and have a good time and ignore the negativity – myself included.

The Red Hat Society teaches that we have to earn the right to complain. Then, when given the option, we shouldn't let out a stream of negativity, but choose to be happy and enjoy what life has given us.

Red Hats don't discriminate. Discrimination happens everyday, yet these women have no prejudice. Their official instrument is the kazoo, not because of some divine decree, but because everyone in the world can play a kazoo.

The Red Hats may have decided that silliness and fun should be the rule of thumb, but their mature view of the world and the way they live should be a motto for everyone.

The poem that is the Red Hat Society's theme song, "Warning" by Jenny Joseph, begins with the lines: "When I am an old woman, I shall wear purple/With a red hat which doesn't go, and doesn't suit me."

These lines may have dictated the official costume of the Red Hat Society and the following stanzas may dictate their behavior, but check out the last three lines: "But maybe I ought to practice a little now?/So people who know me are not too shocked and surprised/When I am suddenly old, and start to wear purple."

We've already got the purple. Now, why not mimic the lifestyle? Earn your complaints, and when you do, throw them aside, don a red hat and join a revolution in which no one is too old, no one is useless and everyone sure has a good time.

Community colleges popular

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are many reasons to attend a community college before attending a four-year university.

Prices, classes, location close to home and the ability to easily adjust to a four-year university are among the top reasons, Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said.

"In some ways, college can be a difficult adjustment," Bosco said. "Here at K-State, the atmosphere is 24/7, and you're distancing yourself from high school and your family more, which can be difficult."

In most instances, a two-year institute is a very positive experience, Bosco said.

"Community colleges are a popular choice," Bosco said. "Some people find it impossible to come to K-State at first, because they may be tied down economically or geographically, but 40 percent of K-State students are community college transfers. K-State is the number one choice in Kansas for community college transfers."

With the increase in tuition at K-State, the number of transfer students has remained steady over the past few years Julie Katz, assistant director for admissions, said.

Katz said a student must have 24 credits in order to be considered a transfer student.

In a community college, people don't get lost in the crowd, Megan Munson, transfer student from Butler County Community College, said.

She said it was nice having smaller classes because it was easier to get in touch with teachers and her advisers.

"I think it's important to get out of your hometown and your comfort zone," Munson, junior in secondary education, said. "So it's worth it in the end to get out, because there are so many more opportunities out there."

Cheryl Prieb said that Butler County Community College reminded her of high school.

"Everyone seemed to know each other," Prieb, junior in finance, said. "The teachers also cared about you and how you excelled."

The size of the campus helped in a number of ways, Prieb said.

"The advantage is that the place is so much smaller, so I always knew when something was going on, like parties," Prieb said. "Another thing is it took, like, five steps to get to the different buildings because the campus is so small."

Prieb said she chose Butler because it was smaller and she could more easily adapt to college life.

"I visited it and I liked it," Prieb said. "The classes are a little easier and they're cheaper, which is nice because some of the classes are the same as K-State's."

Bosco said K-State accepts all coursework, but it is important that the transfer student and the student's advisers know what work will count towards degree requirements.

"The students need to ask questions to see if the work goes towards a specific degree. When they don't, and it doesn't work out, that's where some of the disappointment and tension comes from," Bosco said.

To make sure that a certain course fulfills a specific degree requirement, Bosco said the best advice he has to offer is to work with the admissions office at K-State.

Transferring from Pratt County Community College, John Hildebrand, junior in agricultural technology management, said he lost 28 credits.

"One disadvantage is that you can only transfer 62 credits, and I had 90 coming out of JuCo," Hildebrand said. "I kind of knew it would happen, but I lost some, and I guess I'll have to make them up."

Hildebrand said cost was a factor in choosing Pratt. He said his family farms and going to a community college allowed him to help out his father when he was needed.

"I think you see more people that you know everyday, and it was a friendly, close-knit atmosphere," Hildebrand said. "There were better relationships with teachers.

One thing that benefits community college students, is that the advisers at community colleges are great, Katz said.

"The advisers have a very strong general understanding of different degrees," Katz said. "You can compare it to the arts and science department here. The advisers have a lot of multiple information, so they don't have to go to different departments. They are cross-trained, and that's what makes their advising centers so strong." The retention of transfer students at K-State is around 75 to 80 percent. She said the amount of full-time transfer students who graduate is comparable to the amount of full-time incoming freshmen who graduate.

Katz said with all the benefits that come with the community college experience, there are also some disadvantages.

"As far as scholarships go, you have more of an advantage getting one as a high school student than as a community college transfer," Katz said. "So you might save some money going to a community college, but there are less scholarship awards for community college transfers.

"You might get a one-year award as a transfer, and you can get up to a four-year award as a high school student."

Katz said that a recent transfer from a community college will have to enroll after K-State students have enrolled, so a transfer might not have the class selection they want as a recent transfer.

"Someone might be strong academically," Katz said. "But since they took advantage of a less-expensive educational route, they still might have to pay more for it later, with the lack of scholarships."

Did you know?

Different transfer students

- "2-4" These are the traditional transfer students. They attend a community college, and then it's off to a four-year university. There aren't as many of these as there used to be.
- "2-2-4" These are the most popular. Generally they are bright students who get credit through high school at a community college, attend a community college after high school and then go to a four-year university.
- "4-2-4" Also known as reverse transfers. These students start off at a four-year institution, then go back to a community college, often due to costs, and then finish up at a four-year institution.
- "2-4-4" These students are least likely to complete their degrees. They start off at a community college, go to a four-year university, and then transfer. They generally aren't satisfied and always think there's something better out there.

Program encourages individualism

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Dorinda Lambert, associate director for clinical services at University Counseling Services, speaks during SafeZone Ally Training in the K-State Student Union. The SafeZone program provides support and assistance for those affected by homophobia, hateful acts and sexual violence.

K-State's SafeZone program encourages students, faculty and staff to embrace individual differences rather than act with violence and prejudice.

SafeZone was created to help individuals find safe people, programs and services that are committed to enhancing equity in K-State's environment.

The program identifies and provides safe places and "allies" where those affected by homophobia, hateful acts and sexual violence can go for support.

The SafeZone program was started more than 20 years ago and is a volunteer-only organization. Any expenses encountered are paid for by the Women's Center, a SafeZone sponsor.

It is also sponsored by the Campaign for Nonviolence, the Queer-Straight Alliance, the Office of Student Life and University Counseling Services.

Mary Todd, assistant director of the Women's Center, said anyone may become an ally by registering online.

"I know people that have been attacked for being different and by getting involved in the organization, the university will become safer for all people," Force, graduate student in sociology, said.

In the years since SafeZone has resurfaced on campus, crime rates have been declining, according to the 2003 Campus Crime Statistics.

Susan Allen, director of the Women's Center, said SafeZone encourages those who have been victims to report it to the police or a SafeZone ally.

"People mistakenly think that it is their problem when it is really society's problem," Allen said. "We're trying to make it easier for them. Anyone can feel safe going to talk to the allies."

Any information that individuals report to the allies is kept strictly confidential unless that person wants to report the incident.

In the future, Todd said she hopes to enlist the K-State Police in SafeZone training.

SafeZone is also participating in A Season for Nonviolence, which is going on now. It is a 64-day event that lasts from the day of the assassination of Mahatma Gandhi to the day of the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr., and promotes their vision for a nonviolent world.

The program was recently broadened to reach out to even more people in need.

For example, after Sept. 11, 2001, some international students became targets of discrimination and SafeZone wants to help them.

Todd said the program was expanded in response to recent incidents in which people did not know where they could turn for help, including international students dealing with hate crimes.

"Other-cultured students may not be as familiar with bringing their problems to other people, and we want to reach out to those other students," Todd said.

Allen said that by joining SafeZone, everyone can make a difference in stopping sexual assault, hate crimes and prejudice.

"We live in a small enough community that we can have an impact on the culture we live in," Allen said.

"If enough of us decide that we want to live in a safe com-

A state of false identity in the OC

ANTHONY MENDOZA

It will be a baseball season unlike any other in recent memory.

The Boston Red Sox will be defending a title, players will be defending themselves against steroid allegations and the former Anaheim Angels will now be known as the Los Angeles Angels of Anaheim.

It's a name that is about as ridiculous as those fans who think the Kansas City Royals will finish any higher than last in the American League Central.

The Angels are not anywhere near the Los Angeles area, and those who say they are from greater Los Angeles County are fooling themselves.

They are from Orange County and have been most of the time since their inception as a franchise.

The name change is like calling the Royals the Topeka Royals of Kansas City. It makes no sense logistically.

It is a change by owner Arte Moreno that was built on economics, not, as he told the fans, on building a larger fan base in the city of Los Angeles.

Surprisingly Arte, you are already doing that.

As the Dodgers continue to make stupid move after stupid move and destroy a team that the city was behind last season, the Angels continue to plug away in the free agent market and land player after player. More importantly, Latino players, the kind the diverse cities in southern California grow fond of.

The change was all about making the advertising dollar for Moreno, whose wealth came from billboard advertising. The money that comes along with being a team in the market of Los Angeles, but really located in Orange County.

For all the good things that Moreno has done for baseball– with the willingness to go toe-to-toe with George Steinbrenner during free agency and the excitement that circles Angels baseball each season under his ownership– he screwed longtime Angels fans with his maneuver.

While Orange County may have as many wealthy and fake people as Johnson County here in Kansas, at least it is not Los Angeles.

Those longtime Angels fans follow this team for a reason, and it's not for the Halo's winning tradition. It's in spite of anything Los Angeles.

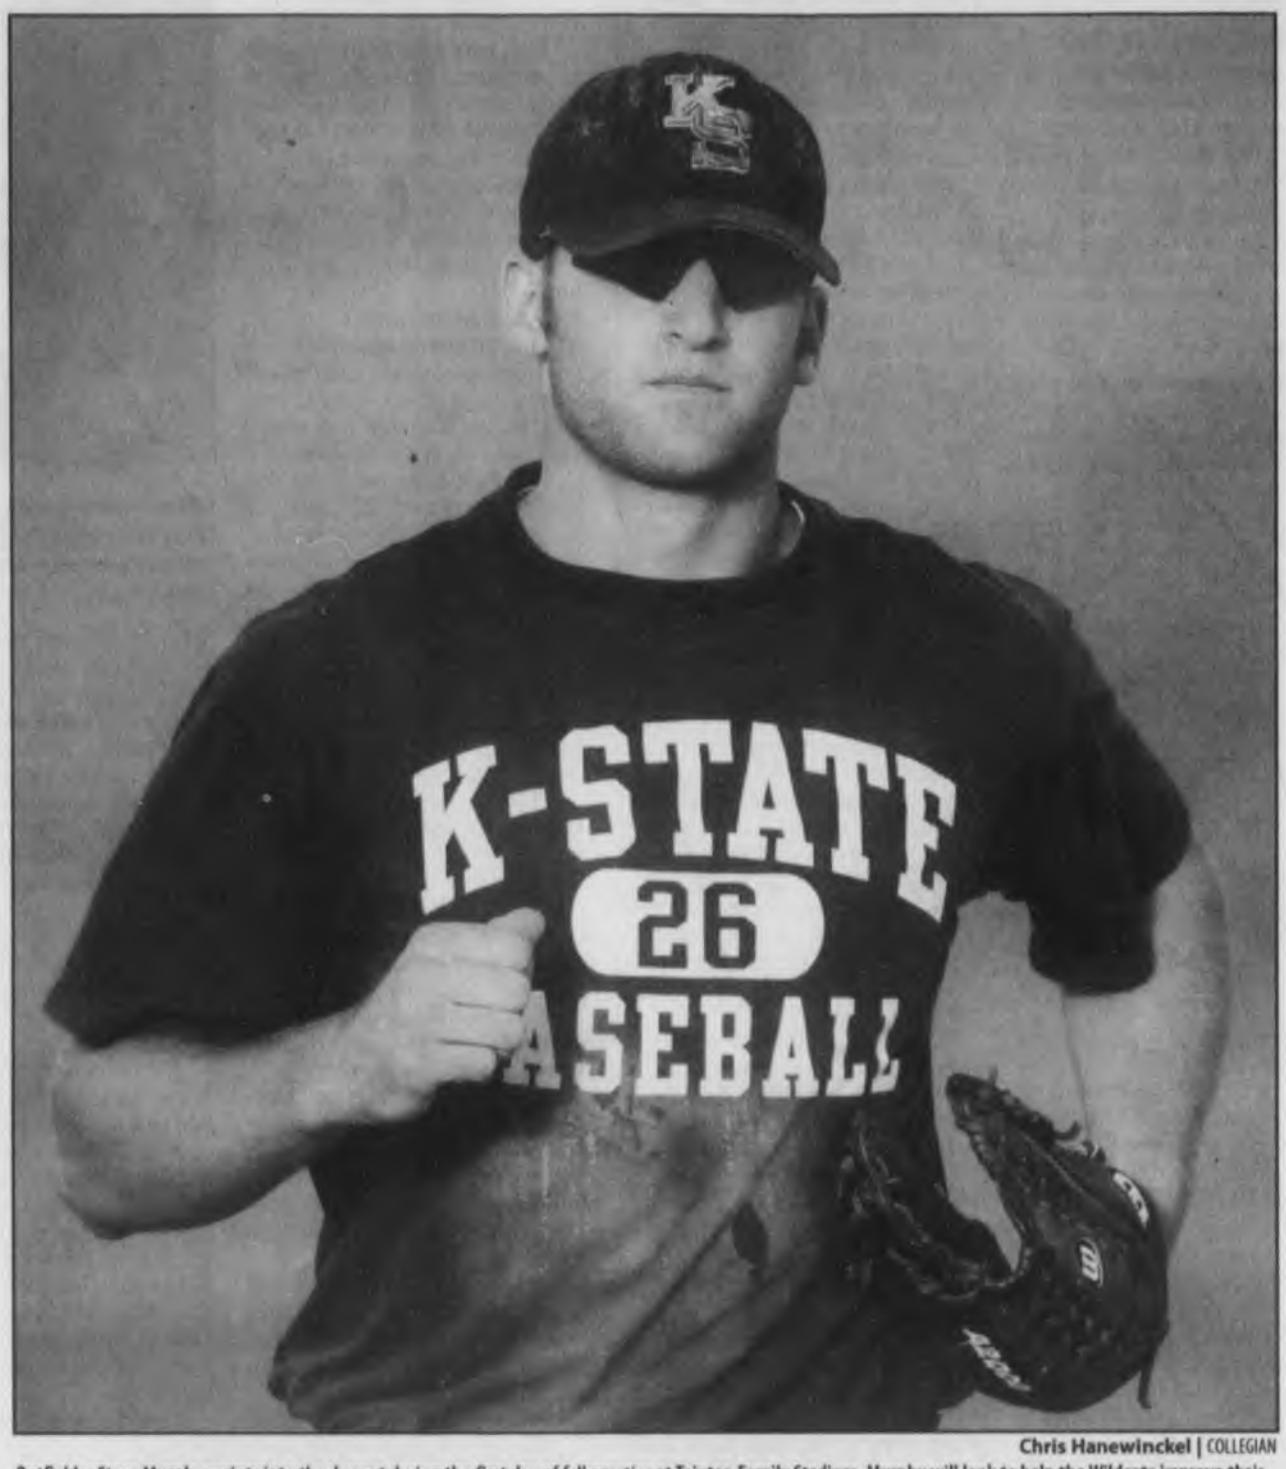
They are Disneyland, Newport Beach and did I mention Disneyland?



It is a false name for a team that has gone from originally being from Los Angeles, to being the California Angels, to the Anaheim Angels and now, once again, Los Angeles when they play in Anaheim.

When Los Angeles actually had a football team many years ago, the Rams also played in Anaheim, but were known as the Los Angeles Rams. That was not a problem, however, because they were the city's original team. More importantly, they did not win anything, unlike the Angels– who won the World Series in 2002 with the name Anaheim on the front of their jerseys.

Although the city of Anaheim has a contract that the name Anaheim remains in the title of the team, eventually the city where the Angels play will get dropped. They will soon just be known as the Los Angeles Angels, because it's just too long to put into a report in the paper or on television.

That is just what Arte wanted, and as brilliant as it may be financially, he will have to keep lowering the price of beer in order to keep those fans he pushed away coming back to Anaheim and watching the Los Angeles Angels.

Murphy helps K-State rebuild baseball program

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While Steve Murphy may have followed Head Baseball Coach Brad Hill to Manhattan, he has proven himself to be a crucial factor in his own way, helping K-State rebuild its baseball program.

"I came here because I wanted to be one of the guys that helped turn the program around," Murphy said. "I couldn't pass up following Coach Hill."

Hailing from Central Missouri State University, Hill and Murphy, a junior outfielder, began their respective K-State careers last season.

Steve Murphy watches a base hit roll into the outfield last season. Murphy joined the team last year when he came from Central Missouri State University with Coach Brad Hill.

Coming from a program at CMSU that had grown accustomed to success, with a 418-91 (.821) overall record during Hill's nine-year stint, Hill and Murphy were faced with a Wildcat program that had not tasted success.

"Coach Hill built a dynasty at CMSU," Murphy said. "It was tough at first going from a team that won the World Series to the bottom of the barrel."

At CMSU, both Hill and Murphy had plenty to boast about.

Murphy was named MIAA Freshman of the Year and received second team all-conference honors as a true freshman.

Hill led CMSU to two national championships and seven College World Series appearances. He was also named the 2003 NCAA Division II National Coach of the Year and 2003 College Coach of the Year by the Midwest Professional Baseball Scouts Association.

Murphy said Hill's recognition is well-deserved and is a result of his excellent coaching skills.

"Coach Hill has a wonderful ability when it comes to preparing teams," Murphy said. "He's a hard-nosed coach, and he makes sure his players are both mentally and physically prepared."

Senior Terry Blunt, an outfielder who has been with the Wildcat program for three years, said Hill has brought about a new attitude to the team.

"Coach Hill's won more than 75 percent of the games he's coached, so he brings a winning attitude," Blunt said.

Similarly, Murphy, who hit a team-best .338 with three home runs and 40 RBI's last season, brings a desire for winning to K-State.

"Steve loves to play the game, and he plays the game hard," Hill said.

Blunt said Murphy is an obvious leader on the field, though not a verbal one.

"Steve leads by example," Blunt said.

"I didn't come here expecting K-State to immediately start winning. I just wanted to help make the program more competitive."

Steve Murphy
JUNIOR OUTFIELDER

"He's a tough player and a good hitter."

Despite Hill, Murphy and the other fresh faces on the squad, the Wildcats were unable to produce a winning record last season. However, at 26-30, they've made substantial improvement from years past.

"It's definitely a building process," Hill said. "There's a lot of teams out there who are better than we are right now, so we just want to do the little things it takes to win."

Murphy agrees with Hill's philosophy.

"I didn't come in here expecting K-State to immediately start winning," Murphy said. "I just wanted to help make the program more competitive."

Coach Hill said K-State has all the assets to build a competitive program.

"I was intrigued with what appeared to be a good program," Hill said. "K-State's got great facilities and great athletic department in all areas."

More importantly, Murphy said, K-State offers support - one aspect CMSU lacked.

"At K-State, everything is at your fingertips," Murphy said. "And the fan support is much larger."

Maybe it's the facility or maybe it's the fans, but Murphy said there is going to be a big change this year.

"We were prepared last season, but we lacked talent," Murphy said. "This year we have more talent and more depth in our pitching."

Women's golf has rough start at invitational

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team finished 14th at the Central District Invitational in Parrish, Fla., on Tuesday. Freshmen Kali Quick finished the two day event in a tie for 26th.

K-State shot 321 in both of the first two rounds. The Wildcats turned around on Tuesday and shot a combined 300 for the third and final round.

Quick led the Wildcats with a three-round combined score of 227. Sophomore Katy Heffel improved by nine strokes on Tuesday to finish the three-round competition in a tie for 44th. Also improving by nine strokes on Tuesday was sophomore Helene Robert. Robert shot a 73 in the third round, which was the low for the Wildcats throughout the event. Senior Stephanie Limoges improved every round, 86-82-76, to end the event tied for 68th. Heffel's senior sister, Sarah, completed the invitational in 74th place.

Stacy Lewis of Arkansas and Amy Schmucker of Michigan both finished with a 216 and tied for first place. The top Big 12 competitors were Maria Ohlsson of Missouri and Sian Reddick of Baylor. Both women finished the event in a tie for fourth place, just two strokes behind first place.

Six teams from the Big 12 competed in the event. Missouri finished in first place with an overall score of 879. Baylor took third, Texas A&M came in sixth, Texas Tech finished in 10th, Nebraska got 12th and K-State rounded out the Big 12 teams, coming in 14th out of 15 teams.

The next action for K-State will be Feb. 28-March 1 at the Texas A&M Mo'Morial in College Station, Texas. The Wildcats are the tournament's defending champions.

CFB | Priest enters guilty plea in Pitt player's death

PITTSBURGH — A priest pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter Tuesday in the death of a University of Pittsburgh football player who fell through a church ceiling while drunk.

The Rev. Henry Krawczyk, was sentenced to seven years probation. The sentence was the maximum amount of probation the priest could have faced in the June 18, 2003, death of 19-year-old receiver Billy Gaines.

Gaines was legally drunk when he fell on his head from more than 20 feet from a crawl space above the ceiling at St. Anne Church in a Pittsburgh suburb. Gaines, a former high school star from Ijamsville, Md., died about 20 hours later of head and spinal injuries.

Allegheny County prosecutors said Krawczyk, 52, was the only adult of legal drinking age at a cookout the priest hosted in the hours leading up to Gaines' fall.

CFB | Fresno State schedules visit to USC next season

FRESNO, Calif. — Fresno State has kept up its tradition of playing tough nonconference foes, scheduling a game at two-time defending national champion Southern California next season.

The Bulldogs finalized their 2005 schedule Monday by announcing the game at USC on Nov. 19 and a home game against Weber State to open the season Sept. 10.

"The addition to USC is certainly going to enhance our program and continue the pattern of playing 'anyone, anytime, anywhere'," athletic director Scott Johnson said. "We have had some great nonconference matchups in recent years, playing Ohio State, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Wisconsin, Colorado and Kansas State. This is a great addition to the schedule."

Tennis | Kournikova stalker pleads not guilty to charges

MIAMI — A homeless man accused of stalking tennis star Anna Kournikova pleaded not guilty Tuesday to battery and other charges stemming from his arrest on her neighbor's pool patio.

Kournikova

William Lepeska, 40, has been jailed in a psychiatric unit on $250,000 bond. He could face 30 years in state prison if convicted of two counts of battery on police officers, resisting arrest and burglary, all felonies. He also faces misdemeanor charges of stalking, indecent exposure and criminal mischief.

Lepeska is accused of swimming nude across Biscayne Bay, bound for Kournikova's $5 million Sunset Island estate Jan. 30. He was arrested when he turned up at the wrong house and started yelling, "Anna! Save me!"

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — Marat Safin lost to Nicolas Kiefer of Germany 7-6 (2), 6-4 in the opening round of the Dubai Open on Tuesday, dropping his first match since winning the Australian Open three weeks ago.

Kiefer

Safin looked sluggish and was admittedly uncomfortable against Kiefer.

Kiefer "was playing the kind of game that doesn't give you any sort of rhythm," the second-seeded Russian said. "Chipping and charging, slicing and spinning and changing the power."

Kiefer, the 2000 Dubai champion and a two-time finalist in the United Arab Emirates, earned grudging applause from a capacity crowd, which overwhelmingly supported Safin.

CBB | UNC's McCants misses game against Wolfpack

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — North Carolina forward Rashad McCants missed Tuesday's game at North Carolina State due to an intestinal disorder.

McCants has felt ill since the Feb. 13 game at Connecticut and missed much of the second half of Saturday's home game against Clemson with an upset stomach.

In a release, Carolina basketball trainer Marc Davis said doctors didn't know when McCants would return to the lineup.

Finding the best burger

Hamburgers vary in nutritional value, quality of taste, price

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Each hamburger has a distinct in flavor and appearance as the restaurant that serves them.

There is the McDonald's all-beef patty sandwiched between two pieces of corrugated cardboard. The patties at Wendy's are as square as their founder, Dave Thomas. And Hardee's Thickburgers cause coronary failure the second they hit the bloodstream.

Jessica Goebel, freshman in horticulture, prefers Wendy's burgers to any other fast food chain, especially McDonald's.

"I got food poisoning (at McDonald's) once. Ever since then, it has been really difficult for me to go back and eat their food," Goebel said.

Laura Wallace, freshman in open option, said that she likes Vista Drive In Restaurant.

"It has a really good reputation, and it has burgers that are more 'home-cooked' I like a real, cooked hamburger to a fast food one," Wallace said.

Goebel agrees. She said that hamburgers at "sit-down" restaurants are much better than their fast food counterparts.

"A home-cooked burger just tastes much better than one from McDonald's or Burger King," she said.

Wallace said that the best burger she has had in a restaurant was at Ted's Montana Grill in Wichita. The meat was processed from bison instead of cow. It also had mushrooms and homemade avocado, she said.

One may say, "These personal testimonies are all well and good, but where should I get a hamburger in Manhattan?"

In Manhattan, there are many choices for hamburgers, even for the student who may be strapped for cash. McDonald's, Wendy's and Burger King each sell a regular hamburger for about 99 cents. Wendy's also has the popular Junior Bacon Cheeseburger, economically priced at 99 cents.

"A home-cooked burger just tastes much better than one from McDonald's or Burger King."

Jessica Goebel
FRESHMEN IN HORTICULTURE

"It's good for a dollar," said Ross Lyons, sophomore in animal science.

Nutrition is also a factor to be considered when ordering a burger.

Each fast food restaurant has its own personal take on the hamburger with various prices and nutritional values.

McDonald's has the infamous Big Mac with two patties and special sauce. Each Big Mac has about 560 calories (equal to about two hours of walking) and can usually be ordered for around $3. McDonald's also has the Big N' Tasty, a hamburger that features a bigger patty, more condiments, sesame seed buns and about 500 calories.

Wendy's has the Classic Single. This consists of a square patty on a bun with all the necessary condiments. Each one contains about 430 calories. The single has the option of being doubled or tripled depending on the diner's intestinal fortitude, but each patty adds 100 calories to the total. Eating a triple equals about two and a half hours of walking.

Burger King has the Whopper. It only costs about $2, but contains 700 calories. After eating a Whopper, one might want to walk about three hours or so to burn all of the calories. Burger King also has the Angus Steak Burger, made with real Angus beef "fire-grilled to perfection." The burger alone costs $3.50.

This only touches the vast surface of hamburgers around town. There are many lesser known chains and restaurants that feature hamburgers on its menus. Finding the perfect burger may take time, money and sit-ups, but the end result is well worth it.

K-STATE CELEBRITIES

Name: Heather Reed

Title: Assistant Director of Student Life

How many years at K-State: 1 1/2 years

Favorite leisure activity: Reading and running

Three adjectives that describe you: Friendly, energetic, genuine

Describe an ideal night for you: A lovely dinner with my family/friends followed by a live concert or musical production.

Favorite aspect of K-State: The people — from students to staff and instructors.

If you could change something about K-State, what would it be? Improve the parking.

Most embarrassing moment in college? I had graduated and been teaching for a couple of years when I came back to K-State to visit my little sister, who was a freshman. She introduced me to her friends and they thought that I was still in high school. Ouch...

Favorite alcoholic beverage: I don't drink alcohol — yes, K-State students, you can have a great time without alcohol.

If you could have lunch with anyone, who would it be? George Bush; there are a few things I'd like to talk to him about.

What is something that most students don't know about you: I like Nascar Racing and have been to two races at the Kansas City Speedway. Dale Earnhardt Jr. is my favorite driver.

THEY SAID IT

"The queen will not be attending the civil ceremony because she is aware that the prince and Mrs. Parker Bowles wanted to keep the occasion low key."
— A London Buckingham Palace statement about Prince Charles' marriage to his long-time girlfriend.

"I'm going to be very surprised that there isn't a rebound and recovery back to the days before Martha had any problems, and her legal problems will not result in any long-term decline in product and publishing."
— Seth Siegel, co-founder of The Beanstalk Group, a trademark licensing agency.

Connery

"Notwithstanding the cinematic James Bond image of consummate finesse, the defendant Connery, in true Dr. Jekyll-Mr. Hyde fashion, acts the part in real life of a bully who ignores norms of neighborliness and decency."
— Sean Connery's downstairs neighbors alleging he's a bully and filing for a $30 million lawsuit.

Fairchild

"You look out and see binoculars in the second row, and it's a bit daunting to come out and do the nude scene. You know they're just looking for wrinkles and cellulite."
— Morgan Fairchild on her nude scene in the stage version of "The graduate", quoted in The Washington Post.

"Today is a very sad day for Rolling Stone. Hunter is a part of our DNA. I feel I've lost a brother in arms. He lived longer than any of us expected already. He gave us so much; his was a great life, full of energy and magic and righteousness."
— Jann Wenner, editor of Rolling Stone about Hunter S. Thompson's death.

"We've only ourselves to blame because we've given celebrities these deranged feelings of omnipotence. She'll be doing brain surgery next."
— Simon Doonan, creative director at top New York fashion retailer Barney's, reacting to Jennifer Lopez upstaging big-name designers with her own line of clothes.

To tell or not to tell parents; that is the question

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: I'm thinking of getting a tattoo! What's hot; what's not? Any advice on how to break it to my parents who aren't cool with the idea?

A: First off, I'm going to assume that this is a girl asking because I don't think I've ever heard a guy use the phrase "what's hot, what's not." Assuming such will help me answer this question because there are different rules for women and men when it comes to getting a tattoo. I'll just focus on the girls for now.

Right off the bat I have to say that I prefer women who don't have tattoos at all. Now I'm not saying that if you have a tattoo that you're not attractive or that I wouldn't date you ('cause I probably would). I'm just saying that if I had the choice of having any particular girl with or without a tattoo, I would prefer without.

To start, make sure that the tattoo is in a "feminine" area. You're probably wondering what I mean by that. I don't mean get a tattoo on your private parts; I just mean that it needs to be somewhere that is considered feminine like the lower back, ankle, or below the waistline somewhere around the pelvic region.

A woman should never have a tattoo on her shoulder or arm unless she is a softball player, professional golfer, coach or gym teacher (if you know what I mean). I'm sure that someone out there is going to rip me because my mom teaches gym class, but I don't care – I stand by my stereotype.

Finding a good spot for a tattoo is just the first step. You still need to consider what kind of tattoo you want. Stay away from cartoon characters. I've seen a lot of bad ones. It might be funny to see a tattoo around someone's private region of Elmer Fudd with a caption that says, "I'm goin' into the bush to hunt some wabbits," but it's not going to be funny for very long.

Another general rule is to not get anything written in another language unless you yourself can actually speak and read that language. You might think you're getting a tattoo that says, "cherish the soul," but it might actually say, "crotch sweat flows south." You'll never know.

It's also a good idea to keep the size of the tattoo in mind. You usually don't want any more than a few square inches. Not only are large tattoos unattractive, but also you should consider that guys are always a little suspicious about girls who have an abnormally high tolerance for pain. Interpret that any way you want.

There are many more rules to follow when getting a tattoo, but there isn't enough time for me to describe them all. I'll give you girls out there one general rule that will cover most angles. Take whatever tattoo you are getting and paint it on your mom's body. If it still looks good, go for it.

If you still aren't sure, e-mail me a picture of the tattoo and a picture of where you will be getting it, and I will respond with a go or no-go.

As far as telling your parents – don't. Why tell them if they're going to get mad about it? Actually, if you're in college, you should be able to do whatever you want. But if your parents are going to get mad, just keep it a secret.

Adam is a fifth-year senior in business. If you have a burning question, you can e-mail him at edge@spub.ksu.edu.

Climate change topic of lecture Thursday

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A mountain uplift may be changing the climate.

Peter Molnar from the University of Colorado at Boulder will present a University Distinguished Lecture entitled "Uplift of mountains, climate change, and human evolution: Choosing the red herring among chickens and eggs (or how climate change fools us)."

Kirsten Nicolaysen, assistant professor of geology, said Molnar's lecture will be about the relationship between the change of elevation in mountain ranges and the resulting change in weather patterns.

Mary Hubbard, head of the Department of Geology, said that as mountains grow, they begin to affect the climate, which may lead to an increase in erosion, lowering the mountain range's elevation.

Hubbard said that students should attend the lecture to learn about the relationship between different natural forces.

"People should attend to gain a better understanding of the interplay of our internal earth processes and external earth processes, such as climate, which affects us on a daily basis," Hubbard said.

Molnar, a professor of geology, was the 1999 recipient of the Vening Meinesz Medal, which is the top award in the study of geodynamics, or how the earth moves. He is also a fellow with the Cooperative Institute for Research in Environmental Sciences.

The lecture is free and open to the public.

Kansas Senate adopts death penalty resolution

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – Having decided to gamble on a potential U.S. Supreme Court decision, senators on Tuesday adopted a resolution urging that court to resurrect the state's capital punishment law.

Sparking their resolution was a December decision by the Kansas Supreme Court, declaring the 1994 death penalty law unconstitutional over a provision governing how juries weigh evidence for and against execution.

Attorney General Phill Kline has promised an appeal.

Prosecutors have urged legislators not to rewrite the law yet, arguing that fixing the statute will lessen the chances the U.S. Supreme Court will take Kline's appeal and overturn the Kansas court. A U.S. Supreme Court decision is the only way that seven men previously sentenced to die would face execution.

The resolution says "manifest injustice" will occur if the U.S. Supreme Court does not intervene.

The vote for the resolution was 38-1. The measure did not need House approval.

Earthquake kills 420 in Iran

By Nasser Karimi
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Under a cold, driving rain, survivors wailed over the bodies of the dead and dug through the ruins of mud-brick houses searching for their loved ones after a powerful earthquake flattened villages in central Iran on Tuesday, killing at least 420 people.

The toll was expected to rise because rescue teams did not have a final count from the three most isolated villages in the mountainous region.

About 30,000 people were affected, many left homeless when some villages were reduced to piles of dirt and stone by the 6.4-magnitude earthquake. The number of injured was estimated at 900.

"Where have you gone? I had a lot of plans for you," Hossein Golestani sang softly as he held the lifeless form of his 7-year-old daughter, Fatima. The body of his 8-year-old daughter, Mariam, lay beside him in the devastated village of Hotkan.

Golestani and his wife were out tending their herd of goats when the quake struck at 5:55 a.m., wrecking their home.

Other survivors slapped their faces in grief as they sat next to the dead, who were wrapped in blankets in hospital morgues or on roadsides.

Some 40 villages were damaged in the quake, which struck a region 150 miles from Bam, the site of a devastating earthquake in December 2003 that killed 26,000 people and leveled the historic city.

TERENCE NEWMAN

While at Kansas State, Terence Newman was a highly acclaimed athlete on both the football field and the track.

Newman graduated from K-State in 2003.

According to National Football League Web site, he was claimed the most decorated defensive player in K-State history. In 48 games, he had 133 tackles with six stops behind the line of scrimmage, 10 interceptions, 32 pass deflections and a pair of forced fumbles.

He was the first player at K-State to win the Jim Thorpe Award, which is given to the top defensive back in the nation. He was also a finalist for the Bronko Nagurski award, which is for the top defensive player in college football.

"He was just fun to watch," Bradley Matlack, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said.

"Whenever the ball was in his hands you knew something big was going to happen."

On the track team, Newman was the Big 12 outdoor champion in the 100-meter dash when he was a junior. He also set the school record for the event at 10.22 seconds.

This season, Newman had 64 tackles for the Cowboys.

"I think he's doing a great job," Matlack said. "Its been great watching him make a name for himself in college and now in the NFL."

ELIZABETH MAY GALLOWAY

Elizabeth May Galloway graduated from K-State in 1919 with a bachelor's degree in home economics.

According to the University Archives, after graduation, Galloway was a member of the home economics faculty of Prairie View Agricultural, and Mechanical college and she was the president of the Texas Association for Negro Home Economists. The school of Home Economics at Prairie View was named the Elizabeth C. May Center in 1958.

Galloway was awarded the K-State alumni medallion in 1981.

teaching at K-State. Ross held a variety of jobs including working for the university as the director of employee relations from 1993 through December 1995. Once their daughter, Ciara, was born in 1998, she conducted mediation training part-time.

Murray points to Ross' interest in energy medicine and her new age beliefs as the reason for their divorce. He said the family returned to Manhattan from their vacation home in Wisconsin in August 2002 and did the things that they normally did during that time of the year.

"We did all the things we normally did. We talked to our financial adviser, talked about our goals and where we might retire," Murray said.

He went back to the new age ideas that changed his wife and made her a different person.

"I told her friends she was having a mid-life crisis, but really it was her body with someone else in it," Murray said.

Continuing her interest, Ross went to a new age training session in Wichita in September 2002. Her return from the week-long session changed the couple's relationship. Murray said that Ross returned with different values and she questioned her life and their relationship.

Murray revealed that Ross had also begun an intimate relationship with someone she had met in Wichita. Ross also took that fall to decide what she wanted to do. The next few months were in limbo for the couple, and after the beginning of the New Year, she decided they did not have a future together.

"She said after sitting in a room with this person, she knew she loved him as she had never loved anyone before," Murray said.

Murray said the divorce was final in June 2003 and Ross' intent was to move to San Diego with the man with whom she had started the intimate relationship. This move was delayed because of the couples' joint custody of Ciara.

Murray said he did not want full custody of Ciara but intended to work toward it so Ross would stay in the area.

"If I had full custody, then Carmin would not move to San Diego," he said.

Murray also said he "did not want to be one of those dads who only saw his kid every other major holiday and a few weeks during the summer."

In order for him to return to court so the judge could change the custody ruling, Murray and Ross first had to attend mediation sessions. The two attended a few sessions at the University of Kansas' psychiatric clinic and their last session was Nov. 11, the Tuesday before her murder.

Bush, EU leaders discuss embargo

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRUSSELS, Belgium – President Bush and European leaders settled simmering differences about Iraq by plunging into a troublesome new dispute Tuesday over the lifting of an arms embargo against China. Bush warned Congress might retaliate if Europe revokes the 15-year ban.

Bush said lifting the embargo, imposed after the bloody 1989 Tiananmen Square crackdown on pro-democracy activists, "would change the balance of relations between China and Taiwan and that's of concern." But French President Jacques Chirac and German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder said the ban should go. "It will happen," Schroeder said.

The China quarrel was a jarring note on an otherwise upbeat day of reconciliation, handshakes and hopes for better relations.

"First time I've been called charming in a while," Bush said after a NATO summit. It fit the tone of the moment, but in truth a reporter had asked how his "major charm offensive" in Europe might win over some of the people who don't like him.

Bush also held a summit with leaders of the 25-nation European Union.

"Europe and America have reconnected," EU Commission President Jose Manuel Barroso told a news conference.

In a show of unity after bitter disputes, all 26 countries in NATO pledged money, equipment or personnel to train Iraqi security forces, though many of the pledges were modest.

All-American forward to leave K-State a star on, off the court

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Since she first stepped out onto the court at Bramlage Coliseum back in 2001, Kendra Wecker has helped change the face of K-State women's basketball.

In fact, one might argue that she has become the most prominent figure in the history of the program.

"Our hope when she came in was that she was going to be a great player, and potentially an All-American-caliber player," head coach Deb Patterson said. "But the versatility that she brought, the warrior's mentality that she brought, the toughness that she brought, there are a lot of players that become All-Americans that won't necessarily bring the versatility and the consistency to a program that Kendra brought to ours."

A glance at the numbers from her All-American career doesn't disprove that notion.

She ranks second all-time behind Nicole Ohlde in scoring at K-State with 2,164 points. She is on pace to beat Ohlde's scoring mark (2,241), which would also make her the leading scorer in Big 12 Conference history.

During Saturday's game against Colorado, Wecker became the leading rebounder in school history, as she finished the game with 1,002 career rebounds, surpassing Ohlde's 995.

In topping 1,000 rebounds, she became the first woman in school history to score 2,000 points and grab 1,000 rebounds in a career.

She is the school leader in double-doubles (47), points in a game (41) and most consecutive free throws made (28).

But wait, there's more.

Wecker ranks second all-time in field goals made (871), second in field goals attempted (1,782), fifth in three-point field goals made (145), seventh in free throws made (277), sixth in assists (362), sixth in blocks (64), sixth in steals (218), third in career games started (120) and third in career minutes played (3,862).

Her jersey will be retired following Saturday's game against Kansas, and it will close the book on a career overflowing with success.

But for all she has done on the court, perhaps the more telling story is that of the girl from Marysville, Kan., who has taken the hopes and dreams of a town and a fan-base on her back and helped take a team into uncharted territory.

The jersey hangs high against the wall, reminding everyone who enters the gymnasium of the girl who once roamed the court wearing No. 53 and made life miserable for opposing teams.

However, the jersey isn't the purple and white one that Wecker has worn the last four years, and it's not in Manhattan. Instead, the jersey is red and black, and it hangs in the gym at Marysville High School, the place where Wecker's legend begins.

Earlier this season, Wecker's high school jersey was retired in a ceremony at halftime during a Marysville basketball game on Jan. 14, a tribute to the player who led the Bulldogs to the 2001 Kansas 4A state title, and runner-up performances in 1998 and 1999.

"She's just one of those awesome players that, when you're that talented and that capable, and at the same time that coachable, that's the biggest gift that any player could give you as a coach," Mary Kessinger-Wassom, Wecker's high school basketball coach, said. "She was unstoppable at the high school level."

She was the first female in Kansas high school basketball history to tally 2,000 points and 1,000 rebounds in her career. She scored a record 41 points in a single state tournament game.

Her career averages in high school were 24.0 points, 10.9 rebounds, 3.3 assists, 3.6 steals and 1.2 blocks per game.

Even with all the remarkable stats and all the success she had in high school, basketball is not what made her special in the eyes of the Marysville residents.

"She always had a good attitude and was so polite," said Edna Mae Schwarz, resident of Marysville and Kendra Wecker fan. "She's so friendly to everyone, and she always thanks God for her talents."

In high school, when she was not practicing one of her many sports – basketball, track and field (No. 1-ranked javelin thrower in the nation) and volleyball (all-state volleyball honors) – Wecker spent her time interacting with the people she would later call "a part of her family."

Her high school history teacher, Bud Young, said Wecker was someone he knew he could trust, and she was someone the whole town of Marysville came to love.

"She baby-sat my kids a couple times, and she was just a reliable person," Young said. "The town is basically her family, and she accepts them that way. She is supported by this town."

Wecker became a daughter of sorts to the town of Marysville and its residents, the girl everyone knew and everyone talked about.

"I'd say she is kind of the icon of Marysville," Schwarz said. "At least, she is for me."

Randy Wecker, Kendra's father, said he has cherished the fact that so many people who followed Kendra in high school have been able to keep up with her during her time at K-State.

"People in the community that we live in, it's a small community, and the people that

Wildcats seek win in Lincoln, Neb.

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The No. 17 K-State women's basketball team is looking to reverse its recent road woes tonight against Nebraska.

The Wildcats are trying for their first victory on the road since they won at Colorado on Jan. 29. The Wildcats have lost their last two road games, falling to Oklahoma and Baylor.

"I think we weren't bringing the competitive intensity that we needed to in the last three games," senior Laurie Koehn said.

K-State won the first meeting against Nebraska 74-59 on Jan. 15 behind another strong performance from senior Kendra Wecker, who scored 25 points against the Huskers. K-State scored 17 of the first 19 points of the game and held Nebraska to just 33.3 percent shooting in the first half.

Koehn said they hope to come out like they did in the first game and jump on the Huskers.

"You like to make a statement early in the game," Koehn said. "It's important for us to come out strong right from the tip."

In the first game between the two schools, Nebraska's Kiera Hardy led all scorers with 29 points, 23 of which came in the second half.

Wecker said K-State is hoping to contain Hardy throughout the game.

"We let her (Hardy) get really hot in the second half," Wecker said. "We really need to key on her and not let her go off for 25 or 30 points."

Nebraska has presented the Wildcats with some troubles the last few times they have visited Lincoln. K-State has won at Nebraska once in Head Coach Deb Patterson's nine years, an 88-54 victory in 2003.

"They've played us extremely well in Lincoln," Patterson said. "They've come out as the more aggressive and physical basketball team. That's exactly what we can expect as we come into Lincoln."

Wildcats, Bears hope to end struggles

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It has been a rough month for K-State and Baylor.

Since the beginning of February, the Wildcats (13-10, 3-9) and the Bears (9-14, 1-11) have have each lost six games in a row.

"One of the losing streaks has to end," Baylor coach Scott Drew said of tonight's game between the 11th- and 12th-place teams in the Big 12 Conference.

Baylor has not won a game since a 67-59 win against Colorado on Jan. 19, and is currently on a nine-game losing streak. During the stretch, the Bears are averaging only 59 points per game and are shooting just 39 percent from the floor.

The lone bright spot for Baylor has been freshman guard Aaron Bruce. The 6-foot-3 guard is the nation's top-scoring freshman and is third in the Big 12 Conference in scoring, averaging 17.7 points per game.

"He is one of those crafty players," K-State coach Jim Wooldridge said. "He's helping other players and that makes him an outstanding player."

In his last nine games, the Australia native has scored in double-figures eight times, averaging 19.6 points per game and shooting 45 percent from the floor.

"Aaron does so much for our team," Drew said. "He has to do it all for us, and that is big for a freshman."

Despite Bruce's best efforts, the Bears are 11th in the conference in scoring (66.7 ppg), last in defensive field goal percentage (47 percent) and last in rebounding (29.2 rpg).

"We need more than one player to win," Drew said.

During its six-game losing streak, K-State has struggled in the same fashion as Baylor.

Since their last win against the Missouri Tigers on Jan. 29, the Wildcats are averaging 61 points per game and shooting just 37 percent from the floor, including a 38 field-goal shooting percentage in their last-second loss to Oklahoma on Saturday.

Along with trying to snap its longest losing streak since dropping six games between Feb. 15 and March 4, 2003, K-State will try to better its position in the league standings in the coming weeks.

The Wildcats are hoping to finish higher than a No. 11 seed in the conference tournament.

"It's very important for us to finish strong and come through the next couple of weeks with some confidence," Wooldridge said.

Coach's job status uncertain

Athletic director says Wooldridge's job security not an issue at this point

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Talk surrounding Coach Jim Wooldridge's job status with the K-State men's basketball team continues to heat up as the Wildcats cope with a six-game losing streak.

Questions concerning Wooldridge, who owns a 64-75 record in his fifth year with the program, began after a 10-point home loss to the University of Colorado on Feb. 5.

Rumors only intensified after K-State blew a 13-point halftime lead in a 69-68 loss to the University of Oklahoma at Bramlage Coliseum on Saturday.

However, Director of Athletics Tim Weiser said there is no question as to Wooldridge's job security at this time.

"It's not an issue for me," said Weiser, who added that he had not met with Wooldridge in the wake of Saturday's defeat. "It is not something I have lost a wink of sleep over, and it's not something that I fill my days worrying about."

Known to have a good relationship with the media during his time at K-State, Wooldridge snapped at reporters after the last-second loss to the Sooners.

Wooldridge later apologized to media in the same press conference.

When asked why he did not allow his players to speak to the media following the game, Wooldridge gave a candid answer.

"I just think they're an emotional wreck," he said. "I just didn't want to put them through it. I didn't want them to crack like me."

It was the second time in the last month Wooldridge denied media access to his players. The first instance came in the days prior to the University of Kansas game Feb. 9. It was the first time in the Wooldridge era that the coach did not let his players talk to reporters.

This week, the Collegian has been unable to speak with players, as Wooldridge has not responded to a request placed with K-State Sports Information on Monday.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
K-State head coach Jim Wooldridge contests an official's call during the University of Oklahoma game Feb. 19. Wooldridge and the Wildcats have lost their last six games.

Weiser said media access is completely up to Wooldridge.

"I believe that in all sports on campus, that it is a coach's prerogative to grant players' media access," Weiser said. "Coach Wooldridge probably felt that his players were not in a position to accurately and fairly represent themselves or their university in a positive manner."

Prior to the season, expectations were as high as they have ever been for Wooldridge.

Weiser signed Wooldridge, who would have been entering the final year of his contract this season, to a two-year contract extension last spring amidst rumors that the coach's first .500 season with the program in his tenure (14-14, 6-10) was not enough.

It was then widely reported that an off-season meeting between the two took place, in which they discussed the state of the program and both of their expectations.

Wooldridge would not give details of his conversations with Weiser, but did say he was "on the same page" with the athletic director in that there needed to be "overall improvement in every phase of the program."

Now, carrying the team's longest slide since 2002-03 and with hopes of postseason play all but gone, the heat has been turned up on Wooldridge after several close losses.

The Oklahoma loss marked the fourth game the Wildcats had either lost on a shot in the final seconds or in overtime play.

Wooldridge and the rest of the Wildcats (13-10, 3-9) will try to avoid another loss tonight against last-place Baylor (9-14, 1-11). Wooldridge said it is frustrating how close the program is to achieving success.

"I think with this particular team and this particular year, there's been moments where you could probably feel that way about it (getting over the hump)," he said.

"It's hard to deal with."

Centers key to success

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's the position that K-State never had to worry about last season.

But without Nicole Ohlde roaming the paint anymore, the Wildcats have used three different players at different times this season at the center spot.

The results in Big 12 Conference play have been simple – when they score, K-State wins. When they struggle, it is more than likely going to be a loss for the Wildcats.

K-State is 7-1 in conference play when the trio combines to score 10 points or more and 2-3 when they score less than 10.

On Saturday against Colorado, the three combined to score 14 points and pull down 12 rebounds. The result was the Wildcats' first win in their last three games.

"We did a better job of getting production in the paint," Coach Deb Patterson said. "Colorado's post game is young, and our post players stepped up and really tried to exploit that fact, and I thought (they) showed themselves as a strong presence."

When K-State's centers combine to score 10 or more points, the Wildcats are averaging 72 points per game. When they are held to less than 10 points per game, K-State averages 63 points per game.

Madden said it is important for the centers not only to be a factor defensively, but also to be an option on offense.

"I think it's always important for a team to have a strong post presence inside and establish a scoring presence as well as defensive," Madden said. "We have incredible perimeter players who can score and create shots for themselves, but it's real important for us to step up and hit a few of them, too."

In the last two games, the Wildcat centers have held their opponents well under their season point averages.

K-State held Texas center Tiffany Jackson 10 points below her season average, but they only combined to score nine in the loss.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

K-State's Brie Madden goes up for a shot while being defended by University of Colorado's Kara Richards during the second half Feb. 19 at Bramlage Coliseum.

Saturday, they shut down Colorado's leading scorer Jackie McFarland, holding her to four points on 1-of-5 shooting, but they did give up 10 points to backup Kara Richards, who also finished with seven rebounds.

Wheeler said the Wildcat post players need to be an option on offense and when they get the opportunity to score.

"Any point helps, and I think we're just going to keep working and keep getting better at being a post scoring team, and when we do score, we have positive results," Wheeler said.

Wecker said it is important for the post players to score, because they need to establish a post presence, which would key a balanced offensive effort.

"We're going to need post presence as we head into the tournaments," Wecker said. "Players coming in, whether it be on the bench or if they're starting, need to have that aggressive mindset and get to the rim."

Former opponent recalls early days of Wecker domination

High school competitor says star always showed class

Kendra Wecker will be the second K-State women's basketball player in school history to have her jersey retired on Saturday, and you can bet we'll be hearing all the great stories of her remarkable career in Manhattan.

JOSH WITT

Last weekend she passed Nicole Ohlde – the first Wildcat to have her jersey retired – for the school career rebounding record, and soon she'll overtake Ohlde for the career scoring mark.

Wecker's already been a third-team All-American, and she should get first-team honors this season. She's the preseason Big 12 Conference Player of the Year, she's...OK, you get the point.

Wecker is not only the best women's basketball player in K-State history, but the Marysville, Kan., native is arguably the best to come out of Kansas.

Ah, the Marysville days – I remember those.

Growing up in Abilene, Kan., I had the pleasure of watching Wecker as both our schools were in the North Central Kansas League.

And the Abilene Cowgirls had the pleasure of playing against Wecker for four years.

Good times.

Everytime we would play Marysville on the boys' side, we all got a glimpse of Wecker prior to our game.

I remember being absolutely amazed by her strength, athleticism, shooting ability and leadership skills.

So this week, as the school gets ready to honor Wecker, I wanted to get some more perspective on Wecker's early days, so I called my friend Alexis, a former all-league center at Abilene.

Sure I remember some stuff from watching, but unless you're on that court, you don't get the full picture.

Alexis gave me just that.

We talked about how good Wecker was back then. Alexis told me that the team wouldn't even discuss much of a strategy before the Marysville game. What was the point? What do you draw up to stop a four-time all-league selection, three-time Class 4A Player of the Year and Miss Kansas Basketball?

She talked about Wecker's domination of not just basketball, but everything else she did from volleyball to track and field.

But that's not what stood out to me – it was what Alexis said about Wecker's character.

Alexis has always called it like it is. She wasn't going to give any sugarcoated responses, and if Wecker was a jerk to play against, she'd let me know.

Wecker wasn't.

"The best thing about her was she was always cool," Alexis said. "Our whole team looked up to her."

Every once in a while, a great player graces a league full of small-town schools, and as to be expected, that player usually awes his or her opponents.

But I have never heard or seen anything like this.

Alexis said the team would follow Wecker's performances in state tournaments and in other sports, and they would print off any article they could get their hands on about this opponent that caused them headaches for four years.

"It was almost disgusting," Alexis said of Wecker's ability to dominate every sport she played. "But we were always excited for her. I haven't heard one person who said something not nice about her. She works hard and never gives up."

"Everybody was rooting for her," she said.

That says a lot about Wecker. To grow up in a small town and be so much better than everybody else, it would be hard to keep a level head.

I know I'd have a hard time. I'd probably talk smack every chance I got.

Not Wecker.

Despite all her accolades in basketball, volleyball and track and field, Wecker never displayed arrogance; she was never too good for the players she competed against.

One particular instance that showcased Wecker's character back in those days will forever be remembered in Abilene.

My senior year – and Wecker's – the Marysville volleyball squad traveled to play Abilene in a showdown between two of the top teams in the area.

To tell you the truth, I don't remember who won, but I remember what happened to my friend Kacey during that match.

Kacey, who stands something like 5 foot 4 inches, was at the net with Wecker right across from her.

Ouch.

Wecker – who could have just shrugged off the incident as an accident – showed what makes her the person she is.

Wecker apologized repeatedly, sending Kacey a card full of kind words.

This is the Kendra Wecker people should remember as she prepares to leave this school – just as much as all those stats and honors.

Since she was a kid, she has always carried herself with dignity and honor.

Alexis said she will never forget the experiences of competing against one of the greatest athletes this state has produced.

"It's cool to play against her in high school and to see her now," she said. "It's an honor to say that you played against someone like that."

have watched her in high school and know us, feel like they have a vested interest," he said. "With Kendra being so close to Marysville, where so many townspeople can go down and watch, that has made it even more special yet."

As Kessinger-Wassom continues to coach the Marysville girl's basketball team, the subject of Kendra Wecker often comes up with her team.

But the subject is more about Wecker's character, not just her ability to play the game of basketball.

"She's just an exceptional girl that our players want to emulate as a player, but more so as a person," Kessinger-Wassom said. "She has such high morals and such high standards that, if you're around her, your expectations of yourself are high, and that's what she's all about."

Wecker doesn't like to talk about the records she has set, a testament to her ever-humble attitude.

She knows that records are meaningless unless the team is winning.

"None of it means anything to me unless we are having a successful season," Wecker said. "Records, they're made to be broken, and they're going to be broken again some day. I'm all about going out and contributing in any way to help our team."

But Wecker and the rest of the Wildcats have won – a lot.

Since the senior class of Wecker, Megan Mahoney, Laurie Koehn, Chelsea Domenico and Brie Madden began playing together during the 2001-02 season, the Wildcats have produced a sparkling 98-25 record, have gone to three-straight NCAA tournaments and have won a share of the school's first-ever Big 12 Championship.

Throughout all of the wins, Wecker has been a dominant force for the Wildcats.

She was the first freshman in Big 12 history to be named to the Big 12 all-tournament team, and she was the preseason Big 12 Player of the Year before this season – a title she will likely hold after the season ends.

"I don't think you can imagine that a young person like Kendra could have to bear the kind of responsibility that she has in a program over four years, and to set the kind of program and Big 12 records that she has – it's just not a fair expectation," head coach Deb Patterson said. "Kendra Wecker was surprising in that she literally sandblasted her career every step of the way. It wasn't subtle. It was hard, it was fierce, it was major, right from the get-go."

"She's just a phenomenal player, and she is someone who, this year, has really taken the team on shoulders so often and led us to victories," senior guard Laurie Koehn said.

Heading into her final home game, Wecker said she doesn't like the idea of stepping off the Bramlage Coliseum court for the last time as a Wildcat player.

"(The last game) is something that I'm not really looking forward to," Wecker said. "Senior year is one thing, but I think that initial walking off your home court for the last time is really going to be heartbreaking in a way, just to know that I'm never going to be able to play here ever again."

When her jersey is raised into the rafters next to the one of former teammate Nicole Ohlde's, it will signify a run by Wecker that has never before been seen in K-State women's basketball history.

"I think she'll be remembered as the toughest and fiercest competitor and athlete Kansas State has ever had take the floor," Patterson said.

When the Kendra Wecker chapter closes for the fans and followers of K-State, it will end with No. 53 hanging high above the Bramlage court for all to see, reminding everyone of the player who helped make K-State women's basketball what it is today.

Wecker said she wouldn't have done anything differently, and she is grateful for the opportunities K-State gave her.

"She's just an exceptional girl that our players want to emulate as a player, but more so as a person."

Mary Kessinger-Wassom
MARYSVILLE HIGH SCHOOL GIRL'S BASKETBALL COACH

"Looking back on my career here, it's been great, and I've loved every second of it," Wecker said. "I think Manhattan and the state of Kansas has really gathered around us and embraced us, and for myself, it's really special.

"There are so many things that I've learned, so much that I've taken from our coaching staff and the rest of my teammates, that not only have made me a better player, but also a better person."

Jurors in Murray trial hear interrogation tape

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jurors in the Thomas Murray murder trial heard more of the taped interview from the November 2003 death of Carmin Ross, Murray's ex-wife.

Murray, K-State English professor, is charged with first degree premeditated murder.

Murray said in the taped interview that the morning of his ex-wife's murder, he took his daughter, Ciara, to daycare, graded mid-term exams and was home by noon when his daughter got home, according to the Topeka Capital-Journal.

Murray said there was not enough time to drive to Lawrence, the location of the murder, then back to Manhattan.

According to the Lawrence Journal-World, Murray curled over and grabbed his stomach and, while alone in the room, asked himself out loud how he would break the news of Ross's death to Ciara, then 4 years old.

"How am I going to tell Ciara?" Murray said in his interview. "Mommy died. Mommy went to heaven."

The interview, which is nine hours long, was at the Riley County Police Department. At one point, Murray told detectives he knew he was a suspect, according to the Lawrence Journal-World.

"If I were you, I'd be looking at me," Murray said during the interview. "I think you should."

Murray's trial continues today in Lawrence.

4 teenagers arrested on drug charges

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Early Tuesday evening, four teenagers were arrested on numerous drug charges.

At around 6 p.m., Riley County Police received a complaint of loud music coming from 1420 Hartman Place, No. 6, RCPD Lt. Michael Quintanar said.

"Prior to making entry, they noticed drugs and drug paraphernalia," Quintanar said.

RCPD returned to the residence with a warrant, and four teens were arrested, he said.

Aaron James Bell, 19, 1420 Hartman Place, No. 6, was arrested on charges of possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia. Bell was released on $1,000 bond.

Matthew Gordon Lawrenz, 19, 2409 Hobbs Drive, was arrested on charges of possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia. Lawrenz was released on $1,000 bond.

Landon Scott Sulsar, freshman in business, 1420 Hartman Place, No. 6, was arrested on charges of felony possession of marijuana with the intent to distribute, felony possession of drug paraphernalia, misdemeanor possession of drug paraphernalia, and possession of marijuana. Sulsar was released on $5,000 bond.

Jeffrey Donald Wright, 19, 1524 Pipher Lane, was arrested on charges of felony possession of marijuana with the intent to distribute and misdemeanor possession of marijuana. Wright was released on $3,000 bond.

K-State spring enrollment numbers up

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Division of Continuing Education's enrollment figures have more than doubled in the past year.

K-State's overall enrollment figures have increased in the past year, as well as those of the Manhattan campus.

However, Pat Bosco, dean of student life and vice president of institutional advancement, said projections in declining enrollment might begin in the next year.

A steady decline in the number of graduating high school seniors might deter enrollment numbers from increasing in the next few years, Bosco said.

"We'll have a decline that is expected to last a decade or so," Bosco said. "K-State has reached its maximum enrollment for a little while because of this."

Bosco said because of the low number of graduating seniors, an increase in enrollment figures is not expected any time soon.

"We've placed an increased emphasis on distance learning," Bosco said. "We want to continue to put a significant increase in our efforts to provide classes around the state and the nation."

That is because Wednesday night, in a small YMCA building in Junction City, the Fort Riley Enlisted Spouses Club welcomed Samuelson as its 100th member, doubling its membership from last August.

Samuelson, like many of the other women in attendance, was attracted to the club because it will give her support and something to do.

21 SGA candidates disqualified from election after missing meeting

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Twenty-one SGA candidates were disqualified for not attending a mandatory meeting.

Election regulations were changed this year so disqualified candidates could win an office through a write-in campaign as they could in the past, but the change doesn't apply here, Elections Commissioner David McCandless said.

If candidates break rules that are deemed worthy of disqualification or don't turn in expense reports, they won't be able to obtain an office through write-ins, McCandless said.

Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator in the Office of Student Activities and Services, said there was not a drastic difference this year in the number of disqualifications compared to other years.

ELECTIONS 2005

Voting for Student Governing Association primary elections begins 8 a.m. March 1 and ends 6 p.m. March 2. Vote at www.k-state.edu/elections.

"I'd say it's pretty close to the same," he said. "There's always people who just don't show up."

The biggest change happened with the Education Council. With the unofficial results released Friday, there were 17 candidates to fill 15 positions. Now there are nine.

"You've got to come to the meetings," he said. "We can't make people go to the meetings."

There was some confusion when drawing numbers, McCandless said. Candidates draw numbers for where their name will appear on the ballot to ensure randomness.

"People had filed for more than one office but only drew from one office," he said. "Those all got sorted out, though."

McCandless said students should be aware the candidates will start visiting meetings, if they haven't already.

Starting today, candidates can have tables in the K-State Student Union. Tables will be in the Union until March 9, the last day of the general election.

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Education bill passes

A State Senate panel has endorsed a plan to raise annual education funding by $455 million, although the proposal does not say where the state will get much of that money. The Education Committee endorsed the plan Tuesday. It calls for phasing in the increase over three years and relying on existing state revenues and cash reserves for the first year.

Iran nuclear weapons

President Bush and German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder agreed Wednesday to turn down the volume on arguments about Iraq and Iran, demanding in unison that Tehran abandon its nuclear ambitions. Nearing the end of a five-day reconciliation visit to Europe, Bush also prepared for a showdown Thursday with Russia's Vladimir Putin.

Social Security

Treasury Secretary John Snow acknowledged Wednesday that the Bush administration has not yet succeeded in selling its plan for Social Security to the Americans, and he said backers would continue to travel the country educating people about the program's problems. President Bush has visited eight states exploring Social Security options.

DIVERSIONS

A WASTE OF TIME — BUT HEY, IT'S BETTER THAN LECTURE

Where are they now? Vol. 1

MARIO LOPEZ — AC SLATER OF "SAVED BY THE BELL"

Mario Lopez starred as the kind-hearted jock in the show "Saved by the Bell." Following the show were a few follow-up series, including "Saved by the Bell: the College Years" and "Saved by the Bell: Wedding in Las Vegas."

Lopez
THEN

NOW

Lopez acted in a few smaller parts and lesser-known movies, such as the 2002 film "King Rikki," a 21st-century remake of Richard III. He also was on the daytime talk show "The Other Half" with Danny Bonaduce.

Recently, Lopez has been the host of "Pet Star" and "America's Most Talented Kid." Last year, Lopez married Ali Landry of the Doritos commercials, but the couple divorced a month later.

TOM WOPAT — LUKE DUKE OF "DUKES OF HAZZARD"

Long before being Luke Duke in "Dukes of Hazzard," Tom Wopat had talent and a thirst for music and performing.

Wopat
THEN

Wopat
NOW,

While attending the University of Wisconsin, he appeared in productions of "South Pacific," "Jesus Christ, Superstar" and "West Side Story."

He worked on Broadway for a couple of years before receiving a script for "Dukes of Hazzard" in 1977. Since cruising on the back roads of Hazzard County, Wopat has continued to pursue his musical career.

He has an album coming out called "Dissertation of the State of Bliss," which includes music from legendary composer Harold Arlen. He will begin rehearsals for "Glengarry Glen Ross," which is scheduled to open on Broadway May 1, 2005.

MC HAMMER

After rapping about how "U Can't Touch This," MC Hammer faced financial troubles in 1996.

After losing friend Tupac Shakur and millions of dollars, Hammer declared bankruptcy and returned to his religious roots by being a man of God.

Hammer is now an evangelist, and his shows consist of prayer, sermons and gospel singing.

He lives in a modest house in northern California with his wife and four children.

Hammer had a brief comeback, appearing in commercials for the last Super Bowl.

THE COREYS — COREY FELDMAN AND COREY HAIM

Corey Feldman has been in movies such as "The Goonies," "Stand by Me" and "The Lost Boys."

Feldman
THEN

He has continued acting through the years, including making appearances in "Dickie Roberts: Former Child Star."

He has also pursued a musical career releasing albums, including the pop-rock album "Former Child Actor" in 2002, on an independent label.

Feldman
NOW

Feldman has another album due to come out soon.

Corey Haim has been in movies such as "Lucas" and "The Lost Boys" along with six other movies with Feldman.

He has kept busy in recent years by acting, filing Chapter 11 in 1997 and apparently trying to sell one of his molars on eBay in 2001.

Bidding is said to have reached $10 before the Web site pulled the auction. Haim has continued to act; his last major acting project was "Universal Groove" in 2004.

Truman scholarship finalist

Scholarship pays for senior-year, graduate-school costs, expenses

By Kristi Hurla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Laura Wood is preparing for a very important interview.

Wood, junior in political science and philosophy, has been named a finalist for the Harry S. Truman Scholarship.

The scholarship is $30,000 and would pay for Wood's senior year of college as well as graduate school tuition.

"I'll definitely be practicing," Wood said. "These people interviewing me are distinguished in their fields, and it will be difficult to answer to such prestige."

Wood is scheduled to interview in Kansas City, Mo., March 11.

James Hohenbary, scholarship adviser, said students interested in applying for the Truman Scholarship in the future should focus on public service. He said that government and non-profit or positive influences in career choices are good traits in candidates. Leadership and service, he said, are two important characteristics in applying for the scholarship.

"Getting involved with opportunities to help with the government through internships and campaigns are pluses for the Truman," Hohenbary said.

Wood

Wood will interview in March with students from Kansas, Iowa, Missouri and Nebraska.

Hohenbary said 70 to 80 of the scholarships are awarded each year, usually with one given to a student from each state with an additional 20 to 30 at-large awards.

Candidates for the Truman Scholarship are selected in the spring of their sophomore years and apply for the scholarship as juniors, Hohenbary said.

K-State is first in the nation in producing Truman Scholarship recipients in public universities. Hohenbary said he attributes the ranking to quality K-State students.

"Students are what makes us this way," Hohenbary said. "But, at some point in there, it's all in K-State's tradition of excellence and the tough competition we face."

The Truman application is comprised of two main parts, Wood said. The first deals with involvement, leadership and academics, and the second involves developing a policy.

Wood said her proposed policy was funding in the private and public sectors of mental health.

"The scholarship program is good because it really pushes you to think about the future and what you'll be doing," Wood said.

Hohenbary said he is happy Wood got the chance to advance to interviews.

"It's great that students are able to put in their application then advance to the next level to make their case," Hohenbary said.

Wood said she is glad for the opportunity to interview.

Club to sponsor 49th annual rodeo

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hundreds of college students from the central plains region will compete in the 49th annual K-State Rodeo Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

The KSU Rodeo Club will sponsor the event and 17 members will compete in many of the nine events.

Jamie Dunn, junior in agricultural communication and animal science, will compete in break away roping and goat tying during the rodeo.

She said she feels slightly unprepared.

"We've had a lot of stuff going on in Weber so we haven't been able to practice as much," she said.

J.D. Schlegel, junior in wildlife biology, said he also feels nervous but that will change.

"Once you step into the arena, it's like stepping onto the field," he said. "It's just like every other sport. It's game time."

Bailey Maxwell, senior in animal science and industry, said this year's team is larger and stronger than last year's, so he has high hopes.

"The practices we have had helps you prepare mentally and physically," he said. "That's a huge aspect."

Wednesday the club held a Kids Rodeo, where kids were allowed to participate in rodeo activities that were specially designed for their age and size, Lucas Haag, president of the KSU Rodeo Club, said.

The club holds this event every year before the main rodeo.

"It's a neat experience," he said. "Their eyes just light up."

Senate to address gay marriage

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A funds request from KanDance is the only item in final action at tonight's Student Senate meeting.

KanDance is requesting funds so 22 members can travel to Edmond, Okla., on March 9-13 to attend the American College Dance Festival Regional Conference.

The group is asking for $1,000.

"It's a pretty standard bill," allocations committee chair Lisa Tirrell said. "They said they have been growing over the past few years, and they're excited to send 22 members.

"It's going to be an educational experience, and hopefully they'll bring that experience back to their group."

There are some resolutions and bills to be introduced at tonight's Senate meeting.

One such introduction includes a resolution to oppose the proposed constitutional ban or marriage freedom for Kansas, which will appear the April ballot.

Sarah Laib, senate operations committee chair, said she knows there are senators who support the resolution.

"I'm not sure if there's a strong opposition, but there are quite a few in favor of it," Laib, junior in speech, said.

Another resolution will be introduced at tonight's meeting involving Spring Fest.

Spring Fest features live music, games and food later in the semester and is sponsored by Union Programming Council.

Senator Laura Wood, one of the authors of the resolution, said by having someone from Senate helping, more students will be reached.

"We like to promote big events like these," Wood, senior in political science and philosophy, said. "We thought it could help get a really big turnout for Spring Fest."

TO THE POINT

Senate should focus on campus issues

It's not Student Senate's job to comment on national and state issues unless they are directly related to college students.

Senators will introduce a resolution at their meeting tonight to oppose the gay marriage ban that will appear on the state's April 5 ballot.

The gay marriage ban is hotly debated and is an emotional topic for many.

Senators will most likely spend the majority of their meeting having an emotional debate about a moral issue.

State legislators have been chastised for focusing on moral issues rather than K-12 school funding and other issues that actually affect Kansans. Moral issues are permeating the government and taking away attention from legislation that will change lives.

K-State students don't need Senate to be their voice at the state level. We get to voice our opinions on the issue April 5.

What we need are proactive senators fighting for more state money for higher education, smaller tuition increases and other campus initiatives for which students can't voice their opinions strongly as individuals.

It's easy to voice opposition to ideas already in place.

What K-State needs is senators who will take a stand and be students' advocates when we don't have a voice for ourselves.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Present-day pirates

Intellectual piracy causes real damage, discourages innovation

AARON DUNCAN

The problem of intellectual property theft began long ago when a caveman named Cronk noticed fellow Neanderthal Strom Thurmond's invention of the wheel.

Cronk saw that this device was quite handy when it came to picking up the ladies. He was left with two choices: either he could to set about the difficult task of actually re-inventing the wheel, or he could simply copy Thurmond's design. Cronk chose the latter, and the travesty of intellectual property theft began.

Even though IP theft has been around for ages, it has recently become an even bigger problem. And like with any problem, I must caution you to think of the children – or more precisely, the students.

A study of plagiarism conducted in 2002 by Rutgers University found that more than half of the high school students surveyed admitted to willfully plagiarizing. Many of us are also guilty of downloading music or movies for free off the Internet.

The consequences of this behavior could be damaging. To understand this, we need to examine the philosophy of economist Adam Smith, published in his book "The Wealth of Nations," copyright 1777. Hey, newer isn't always better.

In his book, Smith argued that in a capitalist system, people act out of self-interest. In the case of intellectual property theft, Smith would argue that people make books, music, art, movies, software and other intellectual products out of a desire to gain wealth, fame, recognition, power or a combination of these things.

When people steal these products, the people who created them do not get the benefit of their innovations. The consequence is that innovation will be discouraged.

What about the cases of intellectual property theft that the creator will never know about? If I download one Beethoven's symphonies off the internet, he's not going to really care. Unless Herman Melville is my English teacher next semester, he is never going to know that I borrowed a few lines from "Moby Dick."

So, what's wrong? The damage here is a little harder to define.

For fear of sounding too much like a bad after-school special, I won't tell you that you're only cheating yourself.

However, I would ask you to consult a little black book I like to call the Bible. It clearly states, "Thou shalt not steal," which is applicable beyond religious meaning. It's a valid point about morality, even for those not concerned about eternal damnation. What separates human civilization from our monkey counterparts is that we have the ability to comprehend what's right and wrong.

Intellectual property theft is somewhere in the gray.

In times past, it was easy to spot a pirate: hooks for hands and peg-legs. They had obvious names like Red Beard and Captain Morgan. And of course, it was just a good idea to be wary of anyone who used the word "yarr" more then once in a sentence.

Today's intellectual pirates are harder to spot, but they're just as dangerous. These new-age pirates threaten our economy. Intellectual property is becoming more valuable to our economy than physical property and needs to be protected. Just because intellectual property theft is easy, that does not make it right.

An inside look at the man, the myth, the legend

A fake interview with filmmaker/provocateur Michael Moore.

GRANT REICHERT

Me: knock knock Mr. Moore, I'm here for the interview.

Moore: Go away. I hate you. I hate the Academy. I hate the world.

Me: Hey now, don't talk that way. Do you hate Ho Hos? Do you hate Little Debbie?

Moore: Don't you bring her into this. That's not...just...just leave her out.

Me: Okay, I know you're depressed. First you helped Bush get re-elected, and now you get snubbed by the Academy Awards. I'd be depressed too, if I weren't so ecstatically happy.

Your problem is you're just too controversial, man. Like on your Web site back in April, you called the terrorists in Iraq "Minutemen" and declared they would win. Which raises the question: Were you made fun of as a child?

Moore: Yeah, but my mom says it was because the other kids were jealous of my giant head.

Me: Yeah, that's tough. But at least you turned out norm – er...um, not to be a serial killer.

Moore: Yeah, because if I were, where would I hide the bodies?

Definitely not under my floorboards, because then the HIDEOUS BEATING OF THE TELLTALE HEART, WILL IT NEVER STOP?

Me: If you don't mind, I'm going to abruptly change the subject.

Moore: Not at all.

Me: Right. Okay, after extensively fact-checking your latest piece of propaganda, I–and many other pundits -have made the allegation that you are, in fact, obese. Do you admit or deny this allegation?

Moore: Obese is a relative term.

Me: You have obese relatives?

Moore: Yes, but that's beside the point. The point is, it doesn't matter what they say; my mom told me to take insults on the chin.

Me: Did your fat mom specify which one?

Moore: I'd always assumed it was metaphorical, but I see what you mean.

But really, the only reason people make fun of me is because they know they can't disprove the rock hard facts in my film.

Me: Facts? The film was prop...oh. Oh, I see.

Moore: I had you going good.

Me: I totally believed you there for a second.

Moore: Don't feel bad. Most college professors still believe me.

Me: Interesting. But anyway, you had a quote at the end of "Fahrenheit 9/11" from George Orwell.

In this film you also ignored the fascistic genocidal rule of Saddam in favor of footage of Iraqi kids with kites and other general scenes of happiness. The question then arises: Have you actually read any Orwell, I mean besides "1984?"

Moore: Actually, I saw the movie.

Me: Was there nudity?

Moore: Actually, I slept through it.

Me: Well, Orwell wasn't real big on rewriting the past to make Fascists look good or the whole puking on your country thing.

He wrote cowboy-type stuff, like, "For there is no such thing as neutrality in war; in practice one must help one side or the other."

Moore: Yeah, I've noticed people say lots of stuff.

When I do interviews, it usually works best to just edit out the stuff I don't agree with.

Me: Really? What works best for me is to just make the whole interview up.

That way I can make my interviewees say whatever I want them to.

Moore: Yeah, I do rather look like a bedraggled hobo.

Me: That remark was entirely random, but I must concede your point.

So, give us a little preview. What Republican conspiracy is your next movie going to expose?

Moore: Aurora borealis.

Me: As in the northern lights?

Moore: Yeah...sure..."lights."

Me: And with that cryptic remark, our time is up for today. Any last remarks?

Moore: BUSH LIED.

Me: Michael Moore, everybody.

GlobalFlyer may fly next week

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Next week's weather may be suitable enough for the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer to finally take off on its round the world flight.

According to the GlobalFlyer Web site, www.globalflyer.com, the current mission status is yellow for March 1 and 2, meaning these dates are seriously being considered for takeoff. The weather conditions for these two dates seem favorable for flight takeoff.

GlobalFlyer

K-State-Salina is participating in an attempt by a GlobalFlyer airplane pilot to fly solo around the world without refueling.

The flight has been postponed several times due to weather conditions since it was originally scheduled for take off Jan. 6.

K-State-Salina students are observing the jetstream to determine if there are changes in the wind speed or direction. Any changes in the jet stream cause turbulence, which makes takeoff difficult.

Steve Fossett will be the pilot for Global Flyer in the attempt to set a world record by flying solo around the world without refueling. The plane will take off from Salina, Kan.

Regents discuss requirements for college-level classes in high schools

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some high school students prepare for college early by taking certain classes for college credit, and more limits may soon be placed on this process.

Last week, the Kansas Board of Regents discussed increasing the current requirements for qualified teachers of college-credit classes and limiting the number of credit hours available to high school students.

Faculty at regents schools would like to see requirements raised, requiring teachers of college-credit courses to have a master's degree and at least 18 hours of postgraduate credit, said Matt Wagner, student senate governmental relations director.

"We agree that some high school restrictions need to be in place, but we don't feel that it is the best policy for students," student body president Hayley Urkevich said.

One alternative was mentioned by Eleri Griffin, senate chair.

Griffin proposed having students take an aptitude test instead of placing more stringent requirements on teachers, preventing students from benefiting from well-trained high school teachers, she said.

Because tuition has risen over the years, students look for more affordable options for general education requirements, Griffin, senior in family studies and human services, said.

"Students are having to take a greater number of classes to be able to afford a four-year degree from a regents institution," she said.

If professors have master's degrees, they could choose to require students to take an aptitude test or simply teach the class according to their judgment, Wagner said; however, if they do not have master's degrees, they will be forced to comply with standardized testing.

"As members of the student advisory board, we have to look at this issue," Wagner, sophomore in business administration, said. "Our view as students is that we are getting GTAs with a lower status as teachers than high schoolers who are taking college level courses."

One reason for standardizing is to allow universities and colleges a chance to adjust their curriculums to pick up where concurrent enrollment classes leave off, Griffin said.

The board wants to standardize curriculum so students are exposed to college-level coursework before they attend a university or any other institution recognized by the board, Griffin said.

"Students don't like the idea of limiting credit," Wagner said.

Students are currently allowed to take 26 credit hours that contribute to their college diplomas; after that, they are considered transfer students.

These credit hours, referred to by the board as transfer credits, are defined as college credits earned by high school students through high school Advanced Placement courses, community colleges or universities recognized by the board.

In the board's current policy, high school students are required to have a minimum 3.0 GPA in the subject they wish to take and an overall 2.0 GPA if they wish to take a technical or vocational course.

College students from all six of Kansas' regional institutions have reviewed the policy changes under consideration, but they will not see the results until next month.

"In Kansas, unlike some other states, we have the ability to impact some great changes," Griffin said. "We have the right to choose the ways we would like to be educated as citizens of Kansas."

Minor gains popularity

Leadership studies largest minor at K-State

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kelly Grant heard about K-State's leadership program when she was in high school. A friend from her high school was one of the first involved in the program, and Grant realized that leadership studies might just be the perfect fit.

"I've never really considered myself a leader," Grant said. "I didn't think it would be the experience it would be."

Now a senior in bakery science and management, Grant is one of more than 1,200 students pursuing a minor in leadership studies and has been involved as a student leader for Introduction to Leadership Studies–the primary course in the leadership studies curriculum.

"I have no idea why they pay me to do that," Grant said about being a student leader.

Ata Karim, associate director for administration for leadership studies and programs, said students originally begin the major because they think it would be good for them.

"Typically, they begin the classes for their résumé," Karim said. "But they stay in it for the growth and the help that they can't get anywhere else."

And the students do stay in. With more than 1,200 students involved in the program, leadership studies is the largest minor at K-State and one of the largest academic programs offered.

Susan Scott, director of leadership studies and programs and associate dean of student life, said student interest was one of the driving forces behind beginning the leadership minor.

"From my perspective, I really believe today's students want to make a difference in the world," Scott said. "Students want to find out who they are, and this is a program that lets them do that."

Scott said one of the most vital components to the success of the curriculum is helping students take ownership in the minor.

"We want to provide an environment that gives a sense of community," Scott said. "We find that students learn best if they feel that sense of community."

Scott said the program is in the very beginning stages of discussing a new building plan. While it is still too early for the details of the project, Scott estimated that the new building would be about 30,000 square feet and cost about $9 million.

Because of financial cutbacks in Kansas, Scott said the plan is to raise all the money through private funding.

Currently, Leadership Studies and Programs is housed off campus in two townhouses where staff, faculty and interns have utilized every square inch to accommodate the growing minor.

When the search first began to find housing for the program, Scott said no place on campus met the needs for the leadership studies program, including having a handicap-accessible area. Initially, there were concerns about the program being off campus, but the students don't seem to mind.

"They love it–they really love crossing the street," Karim said.

Skip Cowan, sophomore in speech, said he thought leadership studies seemed like a good idea but wasn't sure if he would really get involved.

"I grew up shy," Cowan said. "And the leadership minor - it's taken away a lot of that shyness."

Now minoring in leadership studies, Cowan said the program is about people coming together.

"It's a test of who you are, and it takes you out of your comfort zone," he said. "It was the best decision of my life."

The minor requires 18 semester hours of leadership study with at least nine hours of core classes, including Introduction to Leadership Concepts, Culture and Context in Leadership, Leadership in Practice and Senior Seminar in Leadership Studies.

As the minor grows, Grant said the lessons she has learned in leadership studies are prepping her for a life after college.

"I think our major classes teach us about our careers, but the leadership classes teach us about real-life skills," Grant said. "It has taught me to take everybody's perspective and to be a lot more flexible."

Canceled hockey season turns fans away

The recent anniversary of 1980 Winter Olympics and the "Miracle on Ice" reminded me why I love sports.

CHRIS PATCH

You remember – it was when the United States sent a team of amateur hockey players to the Olympics to take on the Soviet Union, the best team in the world, and they beat them.

That was truly a great moment for the sport of hockey and a great moment for America.

American hockey has come a long way since that historic victory, but it has been in the wrong direction.

The canceled National Hockey League season this year reminded me that I don't care about American hockey, and I might not for a long time.

The NHL was in trouble with fans long before labor disputes this year led to the canceled season.

Their ratings last year were worse than the Arena Football League.

A recent poll in USA Today asked, "Will you ever forgive the NHL for canceling the season?"

With 46 percent of the votes, the runaway top answer was, "NHL? Refresh my memory."

After not playing this year, hockey has successfully hit rock bottom and has become the laughingstock of American sports.

Only one question remains now for hockey: Can it ever get back the fans it has lost?

In the event that hockey actually gets back on the ice, something big will have to change and re-energize the game.

Something will have to signal to would-be fans that the new NHL is ready to play – with more excitement on the ice – and is ready to put its salary cap disputes in the past.

One remedy for hockey may be to find a way to increase scoring in games. People like to see action in sports, and every sport now seems to be looking for ways to increase offensive action. Evidence of this can be seen in the popularity of the Mark McGwire/Sammy Sosa home run race and the National Football League's rule changes for cornerbacks that free up receivers and increase passing yards.

In the last 10 years, the NHL has seen a decrease in scoring averages per game drop from seven goals to five.

The league seems to understand the need to revamp the offensive flow of the game, and Commissioner Gary Bettman has promised to tweak some rules next season (if the lockout ends) to return offense to the game.

Even with rule changes, the only reason for which I would ever watch a hockey game would be to see a fight.

I admire hockey for allowing emotions to fly on the ice and keeping what little excitement is left in the game.

The controversy surrounding Todd Bertuzzi's vicious and illegal hit on Steve Moore probably put a damper on the league's tolerance of fighting – as it should have – but I hope the incident will encourage clean fighting and not squash it all together.

Because, let's get real, people go to NASCAR to see wrecks, and hockey fans watch hockey in hopes of seeing a good fight.

Regardless of what changes hockey makes next year, one thing is certain: the league must get back on the ice.

This lockout is a disgrace, and I can't believe either side, management or players, would put greed in front of the integrity of the league.

Actually, I can, which is why I'm a tad pessimistic about professional sports today, especially hockey.

I don't care about hockey right now, because hockey has given me no reason to care. But maybe, just maybe, if they play again, avoid lockouts and change some rules, I'll find that inner hockey fan inside me dying to get out.

Women take charge over Nebraska after 8 lead swings

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LINCOLN, Neb. – Laurie Koehn scored a season-high 22 points to lead No. 18 K-State to a win over Nebraska 94-69, Wednesday night at the Bob Devaney Sports Center.

The Wildcats went back and forth with the Cornhuskers for the first 10 minutes of the game. The two teams exchanged the lead eight times and were tied five times.

K-State (19-6, 10-4) took the lead for good on the ninth lead change of the game when Claire Coggins knocked in her second 3-pointer of the game to give the Wildcats a 21-19 lead to start a 26-4 run to finish the half.

"We didn't play well when we came up here last year and we had an aggressive mindset from the beginning of the game," said senior Kendra Wecker, who recorded her 48th career double-double scoring 18 points and a game high 13 rebounds and a season high seven assists. "We battled back and forth there for a minute or two and then took control."

Coggins finished with 18 points, joining Koehn and three other Wildcats in double figures.

"Coming off of two losses, our backs were up against the wall," senior Megan Mahoney said. "We want to finish out these last three games well to try to finish in the top of the conference. I just think we came out aggressive and confident and were just excited to play. We just played great team basketball and distributed the ball well."

K-State went on a 13-3 run to push its lead to 65-38 in the second half, but the Cornhuskers came back with a 13-0 run to cut the K-State lead to 14, the closest Nebraska (16-10, 8-6) had been since the 1:24 mark of the first half.

Coach Deb Patterson said that during the run, she felt senior forward Megan Mahoney was the player she needed on the court to handle the Nebraska ball pressure that they used to get themselves back into the game.

The Baylor Bears turned out to be just what the K-State men's basketball team needed to snap its six-game losing streak.

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey had a game-high 24 points on 10-of-12 shooting, but it was not easy for the Wildcats (14-10, 4-9) to dispose of the Bears (9-15, 1-12) in a 80-69 win at Bramlage Coliseum on Wednesday night.

Down by as many as 18 points in the second half, Baylor, who sits in last place in the Big 12 Conference, gradually cut the Wildcat lead to 60-58 with 5:13 to play in front of the 5,232 in attendance.

At that point, memories of last Saturday's 69-68 loss to Oklahoma – when the Wildcats blew a 13-point halftime lead – and other close losses entered the mind of sophomore guard Lance Harris.

"I was getting a couple flashbacks," Harris said. "We were just telling ourselves to knock down our free throws, and we'll be all right."

Wildcats use inside advantage over Bears

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Wildcats took advantage of the smaller Baylor Bears and dominated the paint, snapping its six-game losing streak in the process, Wednesday at Bramlage Coliseum.

In their 80-69 win, the Wildcats (14-10, 4-9) outscored the Bears (9-15, 1-12) in the paint 46-to-22 and controlled the boards, out-rebounding Baylor 35-to-19.

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey said the Wildcats' game plan was to go inside, as the Bears were without the services of junior center Tommy Swanson.

"We knew one of their top post guys was hurt, so we just tried to take advantage of it," Massey said.

Massey shot 84 percent from the field and scored a game-high 24 points against Baylor's 2-3 zone defense.

"We talked about getting the ball inside, because Jeremiah, Tyler (Hughes), Justin (Williams) and those guys had a big advantage over them," said sophomore guard Lance Harris, who had 14 points.

Sophomore forward Cartier Martin added 15 points on 5-of-11 shooting and sophomore forward Tyler Hughes had a career-high in rebounds with 10 in just nine minutes.

Coach Jim Wooldridge said he wanted his team to get to the inside in every facet of the game.

"Get to the paint in transition, get to the paint on the boards, get to the paint out of their zone defense, get to the paint," Wooldridge said.

The Wildcats shot 56 percent from the floor as a team and shot just nine 3-pointers, which was the lowest number of three-point attempts since K-State shot nine against Eastern Illinois, Dec. 30, 2004.

"We took very few perimeter three-point shots and in terms of carrying out that part of the game plan, I thought we did a great job of that," he said.

Track & Field | Cost, Heller earn Big 12 weekly honors

This week, K-State junior thrower Coby Cost and redshirt-freshman thrower Laci Heller were named the Big 12 Track and Field Athlete's of the Week.

This is the third Big 12 honor for Cost in his career. He earned the honor after he set a new K-State school record in the weight throw with a winning toss of 70-11 1/4 during the KSU Open last Saturday.

Heller earned her first career Big 12 Player of the Week tribute after her seventh straight weight throw title and personal best throw of 65-07, which also came during the KSU Open.

K-State leads the conference with five total awards this season.

NFL | Colts tag Edgerrin James franchise player

INDIANAPOLIS — Edgerrin James has been tagged by the Indianapolis Colts.

The Colts on Tuesday gave their franchise tag to James, their star running back who rushed for 1,548 yards and nine touchdowns this past season.

James

In December, the Colts re-signed Pro Bowl receiver Marvin Harrison to a multi-year contract, paving the way for them to place the tag on James and take a big step toward keeping their potent offense — led by quarterback Peyton Manning, the reigning league MVP — intact.

NFL | Chiefs release defensive end Holliday

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City Chiefs defensive end Vonnie Holliday was released Tuesday after injuries sidelined him for much of last season.

Holliday

Holliday joined the Chiefs as a free agent in April 2003. He appeared in 25 games in 2003 and 2004, totaling 93 tackles, 5.5 sacks and 11 quarterback pressures. Groin and abdomen injuries cut his season short last year.

Holliday was the 19th pick out of North Carolina in the 1998 draft by the Green Bay Packers.

The Chiefs signed Holliday away from Green Bay, but he never made much of a difference with a poor Kansas City defense.

CFB | Former Wildcat coach hired at Oklahoma

NORMAN, Okla. — Jon Fabris was hired Tuesday as Oklahoma's defensive ends coach to fill a vacancy left when co-defensive coordinator Bo Pelini took a similar position at LSU.

Fabris will take over coaching the Sooners' defensive ends while former ends coach Bobby Jack Wright shifts to the secondary — a position he coached during an earlier stint at Texas.

Fabris

Oklahoma coach Bob Stoops said he carefully considered what position he wanted to fill on his staff after Pelini departed, and decided Fabris was the best fit. He said he had known Fabris since he coached with his brother, Mike Stoops, and current Oklahoma defensive coordinator Brent Venables at Kansas State.

CFB | USC QB Leinart wins 1st Manning Award

NEW ORLEANS — University of Southern California quarterback Matt Leinart accepted the first annual Manning Award from Nokia Sugar Bowl officials Tuesday night.

Leinart

The Manning Award, designated for the nation's top college quarterback, is named in honor of one of the state's most popular football families: former Saints quarterback Archie Manning and his sons Peyton and Eli, who are both now quarterbacks in the NFL.

Leinart was selected in voting by a media panel, the Mannings and a former Sugar Bowl MVP quarterback.

Volunteering offers sense of fulfillment for volunteer, gives children mentors

Brad Poland, Manhattan resident, places canned goods into a large box at the Flint Hills Breadbasket. Volunteers picked up the donations from Woodrow Wilson Elementary School and Dillons.

Most people who work 13 hours a day usually come home with something to put in their bank account.

But for Amy Wright, freshman in architecture, this wasn't the case.

The reward she got for her work at Young Life, a summer youth camp, was a sense of fulfillment.

"The kids came in for week-long sessions, and we got about 900 kids over the month-long period I worked there," she said.

"Our days lasted for 13 hours and I basically worked as a server or waitress."

Roy Crenshaw, executive director of Big Brothers Big Sisters in Manhattan, said this desire to help others is what led him to work with the 5- to 17-year-olds.

"Kids are forming their opinions on life right now," he said.

"There's nothing better than to help someone at a point when they really need it the most."

Volunteering does not only help the children though, Crenshaw said.

"We match at-risk youth with an adult to be a friend and mentor for six months to a year," he said.

"They do things like go to a movie, the park, ride bikes, and many of the volunteers enjoy it as much as the kids."

Jayme Morris-Hardeman, executive director of the Sunflower Court Appointed Special Advocates, said young children can benefit from volunteers.

"Each volunteer is assigned to one child or family," she said.

"For a year, the volunteer serves as a mentor and provides information to the court about what's going on in the child's life."

There are many good-hearted people our there, said Morris-Hardeman, and Sunflower CASA would love to have them.

"We served 160 kids last year," she said.

"We have 80 active volunteers right now, but we could definitely use some more."

Though Wright said she enjoyed her time at Young Life, she didn't want to stop there.

She said she had previously been a member of the praise band at First United Methodist Church in Manhattan, and she wanted to continue singing.

"I started in seventh or eighth grade playing piano in the group, but now I just sing," she said.

"There are four or five of us, and it just kind of grew into a regular thing."

But singing in the praise band is only one of the ways she volunteers for her church.

"I also help out with the Shepherd's Crossing program, which helps out in different ways around the church," Wright said.

"You can get announcement from the church bulletin or call the church, so it's really easy to get involved if you want to."

You love the way your significant other laughs, thinks and is.

And one day you realize that you are in love.

Now comes the hard part: working up the nerve to confess how you feel. While "I love you" is one of the best phrases in the English language to hear, it can be one of the scariest to say.

There are many choice times to say those three little words – over a cozy dinner or while snuggling on the couch.

But there are several times when saying "I love you" is just a bad idea.

The most glaringly obvious bad time is when one or both of you is drunk.

Saying "I love you" while intoxicated can lead to some doubt about how much those words really meant.

Was it your feelings talking or the alcohol?

This also gives an automatic easy out to someone who might be freaked out by what was said in a drunken haze.

It would be easy to claim not to remember or actually not remember.

Either way, this could cause an awkward and uncomfortable situation. If you're going to say "I love you," say it while sober.

Another bad time to say "I love you" is during a fight.

Even if you're struck with an outpouring of emotion during a screaming match, try to keep it contained until things have calmed down.

Saying "I love you" might stop the fight and make things better for a while, but it won't solve the problem. And if your significant other is really pissed off at you, those might be the worst words you could say.

And saying "I love you" just to get out of a fight is a really jerky thing to do. So just don't.

That's another time when saying "I love you" is a bad idea: when you don't mean it.

Don't say it just to make somebody feel better or because you think your partner wants to hear it.

And even though the automatic response to someone who tells you "I love you" is to say it back, don't do it if you don't mean it. Trust me, this isn't the worst thing you could do to someone.

One of my roommates had this happen to her, and she lived to tell about it.

She told her boyfriend "I love you," and he didn't say it back.

Instead he said that he really cared about her, but he wasn't ready to say those words to her.

He wanted to wait until he was really ready.

And she was cool with that.

Saying "I love you" to someone for the first time is as scary as it is exciting.

Just remember that timing is key. And saying it with flowers couldn't hurt, either.

Dean to speak in Topeka, Lawrence

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Howard Dean, the newly-elected chairman of the Democratic National Committee, is coming to Kansas today on the first stop of his Red, White and Blue Tour.

He will speak at a Washburn University Student Association Conference at Washburn University in Topeka tonight and at a rally at Liberty Hall in Lawrence Friday night.

Dean's visit is a result of an initiative to build the Democratic party at the grassroots level, Kathryn Focke, Riley County Democrats chair, said.

"It means a lot that he started here in Kansas," she said. "Down here we don't get heard very often."

Mark Simpson, executive director of the Kansas Democratic Party, said Dean is demonstrating that the state is worthy of representation.

"I think he's coming because he realizes that Kansas is a place with a lot of opportunity for Democrats, but also a place with a long way to go," Simpson said.

If you go

Washburn Student Association Conference

When: 8 tonight
Where: Washburn University, Topeka, Kan.
How much: $10 per person
For tickets: Call (785) 231-1010

About 1,000 tickets for the rally in Lawrence sold out in less than two hours; however, there are still tickets left for the conference in Topeka.

"A number of us are going," April Chancellor, president of the K-State Young Democrats, said. "I think it's important for him to come here, especially with the State Democratic Conference here next week. It's a good time for democrats to be re-energized."

Matt Sinovic, student body vice president and event organizer at Washburn, said they booked Dean last summer, before they knew he would be elected.

"It should provide a good boost for Democrats," Sinovic said.

Book-keeping error reason for lost money

By Heather Bunch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Treasurer's office reported $13,000 was missing last Thursday at the County Commission meeting – but the money has been found.

County Treasurer Eileen King, who has been treasurer for 21 years, said this has never happened before.

"Thirteen thousand dollars isn't missing," King said. "We know where it is, and no one embezzled or stole anything. We sent the state more money than we were supposed to, and the statute of limitations on recovery has just passed."

King said she and Shilo Heger, an office accountant, looked over all the books to try to locate the missing funds. The error was traced back to 1997. Kansas has a three-year statue of limitations on returning funds that are overpaid to the state.

Barry Wilkerson, county attorney, said $52,000 from car sales tax money should have been paid to the state of Kansas on Dec. 31, 1997. The check written to the state of Kansas was not dated until Jan. 12, 1998.

In order to even out the problem at this time, there will be a transfer of funds from the general account into the car sales tax account.

"Eileen and her staff, in my opinion, did an excellent job, going back eight years and straightening out a bookkeeping error that occurred in 1997," he said.

After receiving the county attorney's report, Commissioner Mike Kearns said it appeared to be a simple mistake.

"It's the taxpayers' money, and we have to double check everything," he said. "But after the books were reviewed, I am comfortable that it was just a bookkeeping error."

Grant allows Resource Center to finish renovations

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A $766,000 grant will help Riley County finish transforming the Family and Child Resource Center from its former state as a nursing home.

The money comes from a $383,000 community development block grant awarded to the city on the center's behalf, which is then matched by money from the health department, the county and the city for the amount.

Though they've held the lease on the first floor of the building since 2001, the former Wharton Manor facility at 2101 Claflin Road, they didn't have the lease on the upper floor until 2002.

"Since it was a nursing home, there are still some things upstairs, like patient monitoring equipment," Susanne Kufahl, assistant director of the Manhattan Health Department, said.

"Some things need addressing," Kufahl said. "The roof, the heating and the plumbing all need work."

Once the work is done, many local family services will be housed under one roof. Some, including Healthy Start, Fatherhood Initiative, Parents as Teachers and Family Connections, are already located at the center.

After the renovations, the Women, Infants, Children Program offices will move to the building, and there will be meeting places for adoptive parents and other things. A toy and book lending library is already on the second floor.

She said having a number of different facilities in one location is beneficial.

"We're trying to make it as easy as possible for families with young children to meet their needs," Kufahl said.

Kufahl said they plan to begin renovations in May and finish in February 2006.

NEBRASKA | K-State women win against Nebraska

"As things got sloppy we began to make some goofy mistakes in the second half, and we lost a little bit of our discipline. I thought that Megan Mahoney was the player that held us together and felt most comfortable out there the majority of the game," Patterson said.

The Wildcats followed up the Husker run with a 7-0 spurt keyed by a three-point basket by Koehn after Nebraska's Kiera Hardy missed an uncontested breakaway layup.

Hardy, the scoring leader in conference play was held to five first half points and finished with 21 points on 8-of-24 shooting.

The Wildcats shot 58 percent from the field and knocked half of their three-point attempts and finished with 21 assists in the game, the second game in a row in which they finished 20 or more assists.

The win was the Wildcats' first in their last three road games and first in Lincoln in two years. It was also the first time K-State swept the season series against Nebraska since the 2002-03 season.

BASKETBALL | Cats snap losing streak Wednesday

They did just that.

Freshman point guard Clent Stewart made good on his only three-point attempt of the game to extend the lead to 63-58, and K-State hit 13-of-14 free throws in the final 4:16 to hold off the Bears.

"I've always said that any team that is going to be successful in any league has got to be able to go to the free-throw line," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "You've got to create fouls and you've got to be able to be a team that can generate points off the free-throw line."

Despite shooting 56 percent in the first half, the Wildcats only took a 36-31 lead into the break due largely to K-State's 10 first-half turnovers.

Wooldridge, who has been under intense scrutiny during his team's losing streak, was far from pleased with the Wildcats' first-half effort.

"I was really upset," Wooldridge said. "I just thought we got a little bit careless at times in the first half. The ball was getting to the basket on us, and we fouled too much. We gave Baylor some life and confidence to keep going."

The Wildcats then came out with as much fire as they showed all game.

K-State opened up the second half on a 14-1 run, sparked by steals, crisp passing and dunks to stretch its lead to 50-32 at the 15:56 mark.

Baylor played the game without starting center Tommy Swanson due to an eye injury, and the Wildcat offense exploited the hole.

The Wildcats shot 56 percent, getting many easy looks, on their way to their highest point output since a 95-85 double-overtime loss at Nebraska on Jan. 8.

Although K-State did turn the ball over 15 times, the team had 22 assists on 28 field goals.

"You don't see that everyday in this league, that's for sure," Wooldridge said.

Besides Massey, three other Wildcats hit double-figures in scoring. Sophomore forward Cartier Martin had 15, Harris had 14 and sophomore guard Fred Peete contributed 10 points.

"It's pretty good to have four guys in double figures," Massey said. "If everybody's scoring the ball, it's hard to beat any team."

Peete also grabbed seven rebounds and had a season-high eight assists – the most by a Wildcat this season – and a game-high four steals.

Forward Patrick Fields led the Bears in scoring with a career-high 22 points on 9-of-13 shooting.

The Wildcats will now look to build off their first win since Jan. 29 at Missouri, as they prepare for a road contest at Colorado on Saturday.

"It feels real good," said Harris of the night's win. "It's been a long time, so it's better leaving the gym knowing you have the 'W.'" very friendly."

FORT RILEY | Wives cope with husbands' absence

For a year and a half, Erica Bennett has been a member of the ESC and just recently found out that her husband is getting redeployed.

She was secretary on the ESC board, and by the time the ESC meets again, she will be in Germany.

"I joined when we just got here and I knew my husband was going to get deployed, and I wanted something to do," Bennett said.

"I'm definitely going to miss the club," she said. "I've made a lot of really good friends."

There are two purposes of the ESC, club president Sherri Miller said. The first is to support Fort Riley with community service and monetary donations and the second is to foster social support.

"Wives' clubs have historically been around from the beginning of the military," Miller said. "They've been there for support and to do things to keep them busy. The Fort Riley club has probably been there for 50 years."

The social aspect of the club is important because of all of the constant deployments and relocations, Miller said. One of the more rewarding parts of the club is the community service.

In the past year, the ESC gave out Fort Riley scholarships, donated to the food pantry, the Ronald McDonald House in Topeka and the Red Cross.

"In February there was a two-day blood drive," Miller said. "One day the officers' wives ran it and the other day it was the enlisted wives.

Dawn Browne makes a beaded angel as Laura Saenz watches Wednesday evening during the Fort Riley Enlisted Spouses Club meeting. The club offers the wives something to do when their husbands are deployed.

"But we also sponsored a family fun night that had free ice cream, a free moon bounce and a clown. It was in August and it sort of kicked off the year for us. But it was around the time of one of the last deployments, and we had about 100 families."

When Debbi Freeman joined the ESC over 18 years ago, there were only about 35 women in the club. She said it has always helped to have something to keep busy, but it's been nice to see younger people take it over.

"Sherri didn't want to be president at first, but I talked her into it and I've enjoyed watching it grow," Freeman, retiree adviser, said. "I think the deployments have helped bring spouses out to do something, so they're not just sitting at home, they can help the community and meet people."

Along with the monthly meetings, the ESC has support groups and speakers that come to some of the meetings.

"Not only is there something for them to do, but there's a lot of information as well," Freeman said.

"There's info on what's going on. We bring in some educational speakers to help get through some of the situations."

Some of the upcoming meetings will include speakers on topics such as financial management, handling kids and sleeping alone in a double bed.

Freeman said any spouses that are interested in joining should check out the club.

"They don't know what they're missing," Freeman said.

"There's a good mixture of women who share a lot of the same experiences. It's good to get out and meet these people."

Murray's divorce discussed at trial

By Bailey DeReus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jurors in K-State Professor Thomas E. Murray's trial listened to testimony Thursday morning.

Murray is accused of beating and stabbing his ex-wife, Carmin Ross, in November 2003.

After a day and a half of listening to a taped statement from Murray from November 2003, jurors observed testimony from police detectives and from acquaintances of both Murray and Ross, who was murdered in November 2003.

Later in the afternoon, jurors listened to testimony concerning the circumstances around Ross and Murray's divorce in June 2003. From the murder, questions have been raised on how Murray approached the custody agreement for their daughter.

Wichita's Boeing plant sold to Onex

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas' largest private employer has been sold. The Boeing Company announced in a press conference on Tuesday that the Wichita/Tulsa division of Boeing Commercial Airlines will soon become the property of Onex Corporation.

Onex bought the division for about $1.5 billion, including $900 million in cash and the certain liabilities that will be transferred to Onex. Boeing's integrated defense operations, which employs 5,000 people in Wichita, was not part of the sale.

The Wichita/Tulsa division will now form a new company that will provide parts to airplane manufacturers, including Boeing. A long-term supply agreement was part of the terms of the sale. The new company will be headed by Jim Turner, current vice president and general manager of the Wichita division.

Jim Morris, senior vice president of supplier management for Boeing Commercial Airlines, said the new company, which has yet to be named, will be able to compete and grow at a level that it would have been unable to previously.

"The new company will compete as a world class aerospace supplier," Morris said. "This is a growth opportunity they would not have had if they remained as an internal supplier for Boeing."

Boeing officials said the decision to sell this division comes from the company's desire to become more competitive in the aerospace industry. Chuck Cadena, Boeing spokesman, said the company is going to focus on large scale systems integration. This means the company will direct its efforts and resources on its jet liners.

Students diet, exercise for spring break

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

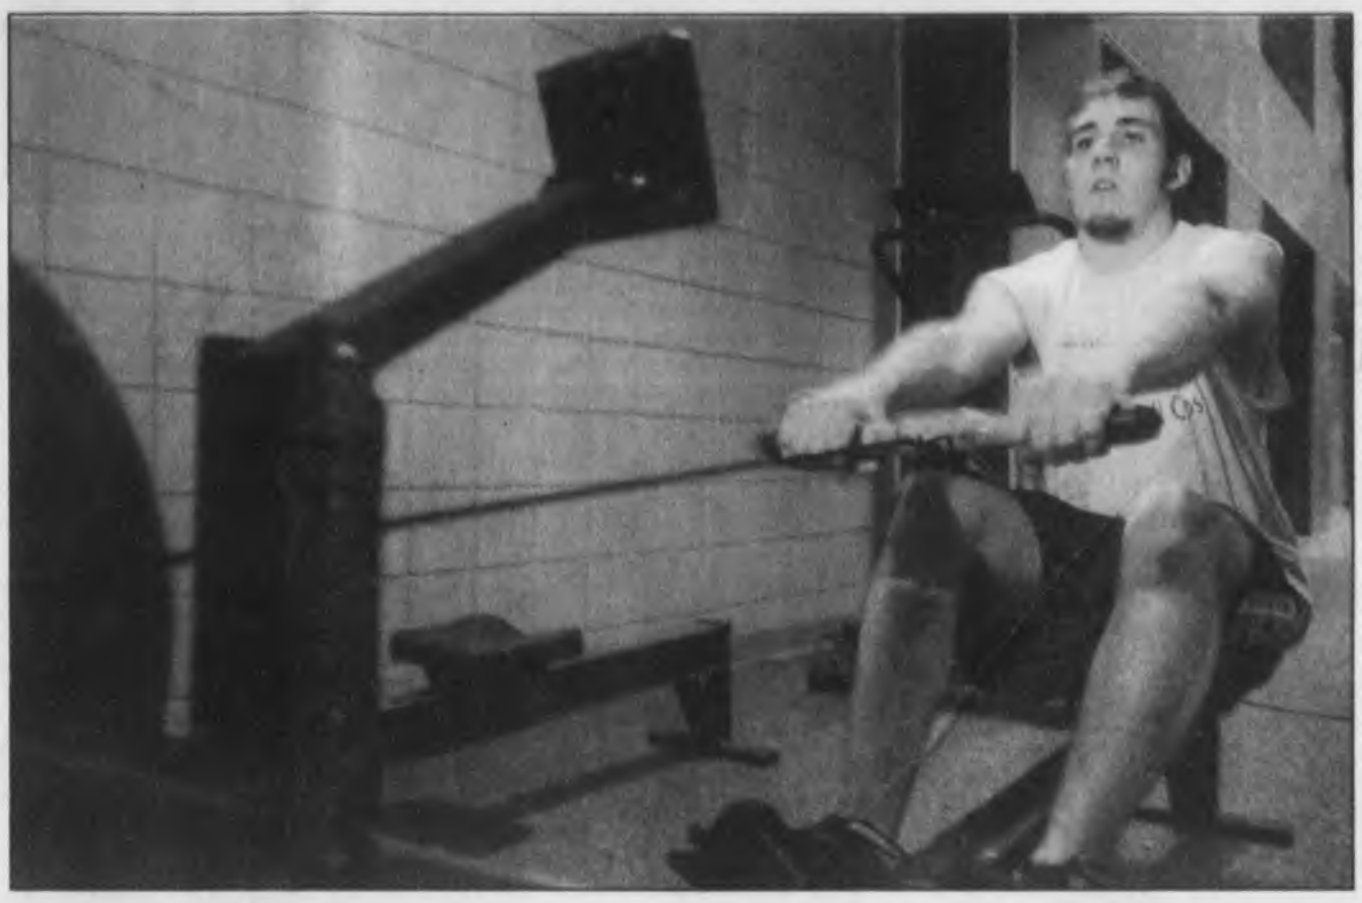
Some students prepare for spring break by spending their time in their rooms studying for mid-terms and chowing down their favorite foods, but Brad Rice said this year he wanted to be in shape for spring break.

Rice, sophomore in construction science and management, is one of 57 students who signed up and paid $15 for the spring break training program in the Wellness Center at the Peters Recreational Complex.

Rice said the program gives him a break after a stressful day in class.

"It's a break from school," he said. "It's also an excuse to get out of the house."

The program is in its third year at K-State. Tiffany Gehlen, personal trainer at the Wellness Center, said it has helped many students get fit before spring break.



"The spring training program is a six-week program that helps people get into better shape for any activity and get more fit," Gehlen said.

Chris Ahern, senior in architectural engineering, said he has been wanting to do this program for a few years.

"I had been planning on doing it for the past few years and finally got to where I signed up early enough," he said. "I wanted to know about nutrition and ideas."

Rice said the spring training program helps him remember

Students utilize fitness centers to prepare for swimsuit season

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fitness centers in Manhattan have seen an increase in student customers as they prepare for spring break.

"Always after the first of the year with New Year's resolutions there are more people who begin a fitness plan and start working out," said Heather Reed, owner of Prime Time Fitness.

Students who are hoping to get fit before spring break are taking advantage of some of the specials clubs are offering as well.

"We do have a student rate," Reed said. "We also have a variety of classes and fitness equipments and free weights."

Those who have not yet started to work out may be in trouble as time is running short, Reed said.

"So many times people are looking for a quick fix and fitness is a lifestyle," she said.

Reed said students can try to get fit by doing anything to get active.

"Now students need to increase the amount they are working out to most days a week if trying to get fit before spring break," she said.

Seth Flory, employee at Maximum Performance, said he agreed.

"You can easily go every day, there's nothing wrong with that, but you need to watch how much you do," he said.

Flory said there are negative side effects when people try to exercise too much.

"You are much more prone to injury," he said. "Fatigue will set in, so it's good to give yourself a break."

Flory said it is good to start slowly and gradually progress.

"If you walk for half an hour, try to increase it every couple of days," he said.

Some common injuries that can arise from over exercising include various types of sprains, strains and pulls, Flory said.

"Any kind of overuse of the body can cause injury," he said. "You get careless when you work out too much. Your body gets worn down."

3 presidential candidates accused of campaign violations

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

ELECTIONS 2005

Voting for Student Governing Association primary elections begins 8 a.m. March 1 and ends 6 p.m. March 2. Vote at www.k-state.edu/elections.

Four candidates were written citations for committing minor violations, and one is contesting the decision.

Three of the four candidates were presidential pairs.

Presidential candidate pair Jeremy Parker and Dustin Schirer were written up for two chalking violations, both with a $5 fine.

One violation was for defacing another candidate's campaign materials. The other was for chalking within 30 feet of a building.

Parker said they are going to appeal the citations.

"The main reason I'm doing it is because I'm broke right now," he said. "I figured if we have to pay a fine, we should make it as inconvenient as possible for the people issuing the citation."

Inside
See more election coverage on pages 3 and 5.

The pair does have problems with 30-foot zone citation, however.

"When we were served with this citation, it didn't specify anything with where they were, so basically it was a flawed citation," he said.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said facilities called to report the chalking violations Thursday morning. K-State facilities removed the chalk.

Parker said there were about 15 people helping him sidewalk chalk. A member or members of his campaign drew arrows from the Parker/Schirer chalking to Presidential candidate pair Michael Burns and Grant Groene chalking that said, "Could these guys be more boring?" which is where the second violation occurred.

Dean to retire to devote more time to family, community

By Krystle Richard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Larry Erpelding will be greatly missed in the College of Agriculture.

Erpelding will retire from his position as the associate dean and professor for the College of Agriculture at the end of this semester.

Erpelding has served as administrator for the College of Agriculture since the fall of 1977.

Kevin Donnelly, assistant dean for agriculture academics and programming, has been working with Erpelding for the past seven years.

"What stands out most is his commitment to serve the students first," Donnelly said. "I haven't worked with anyone with more dedication to K-State, the College of Agriculture and the students."

Erpelding's position included providing leadership and coordinating and administrating the teaching programs and various related functions in the College of Agriculture.

After 28 years of administrating and teaching in two different departments at K-State, Erpelding has decided to take time to fulfill other goals.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Larry Erpelding is retiring as associate dean in academic programs for agriculture. Erpelding has served as administrator for the College of Agriculture since the fall of 1977. Erpelding will now take time to fulfill other goals.

"I want to accomplish the goals I sat out while I am still young enough," Erpelding said. "I want to spend more time with my family, become more involved in church, the community and humanitarian activities."

When asked why he chose K-State in the beginning, Erpelding said he wanted to stay in his home state.

"It provided me with an opportunity to become more involved in higher education administration," he said.

Erpelding said after he retires he will remember the students most.

"It was a pleasure to work with tremendous students in the agriculture department," he said. "It was also a privilege to work with the best faculty in the United States."

Online voting beneficial to voting students

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

ELECTIONS 2005

Voting for Student Governing Association primary elections begins 8 a.m. Tuesday and ends 6 p.m. Wednesday. Vote at www.k-state.edu/elections.

K-State is in its third year using its own system for Student Governing Association elections voting. Before, a different company was used each year. This is the sixth year that online voting has been available.

Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator for the office of student activities and services, said the other programs didn't fit K-State's election process, and problems were experienced.

"It wasn't specifically made for the way we do our elections," he said. "That was one of the benefits of bringing it in–house because someone would make it the way we want."

In 2002, a voting vendor called iBallot.com was used. That year there was a re-vote because some votes weren't calculated.

Originally, presidential pair Matt Wolters and Mandy Achilles won the race against Zac Cook and Todd Kohman by 58 votes. Vote totals didn't add up, and there were other technical difficulties. The results were contested and after a re-vote, the out-come switched.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said the confusion in 2002 was the reason for the switch to a K-State-developed program.

"That is pretty much the whole reason," he said. "The vendor we used screwed up royally."

The current system hasn't had any such problems.

"The software behaved the way it was supposed to," said Rob Caffey, director of mediated education.

Caffey said voting online is better for students and vote counters.

"I think that voting online is probably more convenient for some people," he said. "It has very quick tabulations of votes."

Loren Wilson, application development manager for mediated education, said a simulated election has been held to make sure the system works properly and is well secured.

Caffey said there hasn't been a problem with people trying to hack into the program.

"There's always reasonable precautions that are taken against that," he said. "We monitor the election activity and look for strange things."

Online voting allows students to vote from any Internet connection, but it doesn't keep track of whom voted for whom, Harlan said.

Also, when voting, students can't write–in someone who's not qualified; for example, a business student can't write-in an engineering student for business senator, he said.

Tuition to increase nearly 10 percent

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tuition at K-State will increase again this fall.

"Right now, none of it has been set in stone, but I feel very confident that the increase will be 9.9 percent for in-state students and that includes tuition and fees," said Hayley Urkevich, student body president.

Although the tuition increase for out-of-state students hasn't been decided, it's not expected to be much different than for residents.

Urkevich said the reason tuition has increased in the past few years was because the university hadn't been raising it enough before. Part of Urkevich and Vice President Erik Ankrom's campaign platform last year was to keep tuition increases in single digits.

Tuition increases
2001-02: 3 percent
2002-03: 25.1 percent
2003-04: 20 percent
2004-05: 17.1 percent

"We knew there was going to be tuition increases, and we wanted to keep that in single digits," she said.

After it is decided at K-State, the increase is brought before the Kansas Board of Regents to be approved, which hasn't happened yet, Urkevich said.

Bruce Shubert, associate vice president for administration and finance, said he expected the university to settle on a proposal amount sometime within the next month.

Shubert said K-State does consider other land-grant universities rates when it decides how much to increase tuition.

"We were below the median a year ago, and I'm sure we'll be below the median again this year," he said.

Lincoln Hillyer, senior in finance, said he understood the increases needed to be made.

"I think the state and legislature are the main problem," he said.

"They aren't giving enough money to higher education to allow universities to keep tuition rises at a reasonable level."

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Candidates need to follow set regulations

Student body presidential candidates need to be responsible enough to follow the elections regulations and run an honest campaign.

Three presidential candidate pairs were accused of minor violations Thursday.

The violations include defacing another candidate's sidewalk chalking, chalking too close to a building entrance and illegal chalking.

While these violations seem minor, there is no excuse for not following the rules.

Candidates need to follow the rules and campaign officials must enforce them in order to have confidence with the results of the primary election Wednesday evening.

In a campaign, following the rules isn't enough.

Candidates should ensure their team of supporters is promoting a platform rather than merely attacking opponents.

Last year's election was plagued with accusations of voter fraud and illegal polling places, which caused uncertainty and lack of confidence not only in the winner but the election system itself.

While violations may be minor, they are still getting around the rules.

Students need to see candidates putting their best foot forward so on election day responsible votes are cast.

It's time to play fair.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Bush policy hurts schools

Legislation's focus on standardized tests compromises true education

ABBY HILES

To set the record straight, I was a pretty smart kid in high school. I got good grades, scored relatively high on standardized tests and basically pulled a full ride to college.

And even though I accomplished all of that, had my school been put through the rigorous hoops of the No Child Left Behind laws currently in place all over the country, it wouldn't have made a difference.

My school, no doubt, would have failed to meet the absurd stipulations that come along with this legislation.

Let me give you the rundown of President Bush's brainchild, NCLB. According to the National Education Association, No Child Left Behind is the latest revision of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 which was enacted to "provide guidance and funds to K-12 schools."

However in 2001, President Bush introduced the latest modification of the nearly 40-year-old education law. The newest revision focuses on academic achievement through adequate yearly progress, annual testing, teacher quality and school improvement.

The problem with the law is not President Bush's choice for what needs to be improved. Frankly, all of these areas are vital to education. We do need to continually test our students to see improvement. Teachers should be educated and doing their jobs.

But No Child Left Behind doesn't even focus on that.

President Bush's legislation isn't about concern for the students, but for the students' test scores.

According to the ESEA and NCLB legislation, if fewer than 95 percent of students in a school fail to take and pass Adequate Yearly Progress exams, then the entire school loses federal funding. This, in turn, would place a heavy burden on the state for education funds.

So instead of keeping with traditional programs of study, school districts across the country are now teaching strictly to the tests to maintain their federal financial support.

After all, why should they teach the regular curriculum and ask the students to learn at their own pace, being able to go back and rework things they don't understand, when teachers can teach to the AYP tests instead and receive more funding?

So this is really what education has come to– teaching directly from exams to get results as opposed to students actually learning. The problems that can result from this are innumerable.

Essentially, NCLB laws are dumbing down high school curricula and forcing districts to cut out upper level academic classes (since they won't be tested on them) and even possibly the losing art and music programs.

I'm sure President Bush had good intentions when he concocted this law. Obviously, his first thought was for students to be able to meet high standards so our country could compete with education standards across the globe.

But how can he expect every student to perform at the exact same level? When they don't, schools are punished instead of offered assistance.

NCLB is the beginning of the end of true education.

With true education, teachers should help students to learn in the best way they can, whether that is hands on in a special needs vocation classroom or in an advanced AP calculus class. They should be able to push students to reach their goals, yet aide them when they need help getting there.

This should be the philosophy of education, not standardized tests and threats of pulled school funding.

Too bad President Bush cares about test scores more than he does about the students.

Signs, chalk shouldn't influence voting

ANNIE LEWIS

I hate tree huggers. They are incredibly annoying. I just want to rip them off the trees.

I'm talking about those silly signs hugging every single tree on campus.

I finally decided for whom I am going to vote. I saw some really awesome sidewalk art. If someone can make letters look that cool, you better believe they will have heavenly leadership abilities.

Then, just as I think I absolutely know whom to vote for, I see all those signs. Some of the catchiest phrases make me smile.

They remind me of the time in high school that I tried to run for class president. I had this really cool slogan: "Don't be a bananie, vote for Annie."

Doesn't that just make you want to put a check mark next to my name? I know it doesn't, which is why I lost to the class' top jock.

K-State's SGA elections really aren't at all like high school. Here, they have more than posters. They have pens, t–shirts and Web sites.

Don't forget the tree huggers. They have plenty of those.

It's too bad the city commission candidates don't gather friends together to chalk up campus. It's ironic that SGA candidates spend more money and time campaigning than the people who will run our city.

Since SGA candidates are working so hard to buy votes, here are some ideas on what could win more support.

Hand out hot chocolate/coffee one morning before classes at 8:30 a.m. The candidate with the best–tasting brew wins.

Gather the best local bands you can and have a live outdoor concert one afternoon. The candidate with the coolest show wins.

Rent a go-cart with your names on it and give people rides to their classes. Not having to walk all the way to Umberger sure would be nice. I would definitely vote for you regardless of what you stood for.

The platforms don't seem to matter. This isn't a national election, and few students know very much about what exactly SGA does. So maybe it doesn't matter for whom you vote. However, there is always a chance that electing a deficient presidential team would lead to bad results on campus.

I'll admit that last year I ignored all the resources and decided to vote based on the catchiness of the slogans. One of them actually had a rhythm I would repeat as I walked to class.

Then, at the last minute I realized the error of my ways and withheld my vote. I didn't even know what the slogan actually stood for.

The Collegian gave print space to the candidates to introduce themselves and share their views. Art, posters and Web sites are awesome, but I'm not going to base my vote on that. To vote intelligently, you need to know who the candidates are and what they stand for. The nifty archives on the Collegian Web site can provide helpful information toward that end.

The candidates' Web sites are also more than just some flashy graphics. They allow voters another quick and easy way to have access to the candidates' platforms.

There is nothing worse than a misinformed voter. OK, so a birthday cake made out of tofu is a step below that, but the people who vote on the basis of free merchandise would be better off not voting at all.

To everyone who is voting: remember, you can be bought. If you don't want to be, turn on your computer, open up the paper, spend a little time to inform yourself and make wise decisions.

Accountable leadership

By Amy Preston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Treaster
PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

Hart
VICE-PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

Andrew Treaster and David Hart want students to be able to monitor what's going on at K-State.

That's where the presidential and vice presidential candidates' platform of accountable leadership comes into play.

"Our idea is to give students ownership in their education and ownership in their experiences at K-State," said Treaster, senior in political science and economics.

Under their platform, the pair highlights four main accountability issues, including Senate, academics, tuition and parking.

Treaster and Hart, senior in accounting and finance, said all four issues fall under Senate accountability.

"We can't really address other problems until the Senate functions correctly," Treaster said. "The academic, tuition and parking are all important, but we believe the energy and direction of Senate needs revitalized."

The pair wants to establish a general assembly, so students can come and voice their opinions and concerns on issues prior to Student Senate meetings on a biweekly basis. Additionally, Treaster said they want to establish a Diversity Programming Standing Committee that focuses on diversity initiatives and allocating the $100,000 budget.

For academic accountability, Hart said the pair wants to establish a university-wide honors program.

"Right now, not every college has an honors program," Hart said. "This program sets universal standards for every college. That way students can take honors classes in all colleges."

Treaster and Hart also want to look toward a long-term tuition plan, which includes possibly establishing tuition contracts, where entering freshmen would be locked into a certain credit hour tuition rate throughout their college career.

"We realize this won't happen in its entirety, but we want to go to administration with some aspects from this idea," Treaster said. "It's a give-and-take, and it's going to be a long process."

Lastly, the pair wants to focus on parking issues, namely the construction of a parking garage.

"It's been brought to our attention that administration wants to see the student needs for this," Treaster said.

The pair said their campaign goes beyond the four issues of accountability.

"We really want students to bring ideas to us," Treaster said. "Our platform highlights needs, but not everything students need from K-State."

Pair pledges dedication

By Abby Brownback

Burns
PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

Groene
VICE-PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

Student body president and vice-president candidate pair Michael Burns and Grant Groene have employed the slogan "Your Voice, Your Choice" to emphasize their dedication to students.

Burns, senior in secondary education, and Groene, who both said their campaign was going well, have established a four-pillar platform to work on if elected.

The first, a contracted tuition rate, would lock students into a per-credit-hour rate when they enter K-State and prevent them from seeing increases in tuition.

The rate would be calculated by averaging the tuition rates for a student's first semester at K-State with the rates projected for the student's last year.

"Students will actually pay more in the beginning, but they'll pay less in the end," Burns said.

The second, a 55 cents per-credit-hour service fee, would replace $8 transcript fees, the $15 graduation fee and the annual $30 fee for using Career and Employment Services.

Over a student's time at K-State, Burns estimated the total cost would be around $80.

Workshops for graduate teaching assistants are the third item on the duo's agenda.

The workshops would occur at the beginning of each semester and would instruct GTAs in writing exams and syllabi and catering to different teaching styles, said Groene, senior in agronomy.

Finally, online teacher evaluations through the Wildcat Information Network would give students the opportunity to evaluate teachers and classes and review past evaluations of both.

"We just want to make sure students have professors and classes that match their learning style," Burns said.

Burns said all four proposals are feasible.

"We've talked to administration about our platform and they've indicated everything we want to propose is a very, very workable proposal," he said.

The pair pointed to their compatibility, their experience and their diligence as reasons why students should vote for them.

"We're going to work hard to tackle all our platform issues," Groene said.

"Michael and I work well together. We want to represent students' voices."

Presidential candidates focus on parking, diversity

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Schmit
PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

Holtzen
VICE-PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

Presidential candidate Bill Schmit and running mate Jack Holtzen, juniors in golf course management, are running in order to help the student body.

"It's something we're interested in, and we think that we can do a lot of good things for the students," Schmit said. "We're not doing this to pad our resumes or for ourselves. It's for the students."

Schmit and Holtzen said they are concerned about several issues affecting students. The pair is campaigning on a multi-issue platform.

The two are most passionate about incorporating a wrestling team. Even if the team can't be established during their term, they hope it will happen some day. They plan to put those plans in motion, Schmit said.

In compliance with Title IX, the team is considering several women's sports to incorporate as well, both said. They have talked to numerous women and are considering swimming, softball or soccer.

"We're the ones walking around campus asking students what they think and hopefully we'll be in a position to do something," Holtzen said.

Another issue that concerns Schmit and Holtzen is the parking. Schmit said there are several options that could be considered to fix the problem.

However, before dealing with the parking, the pair plans to reform the ticketing system. They want to implement a plan with cheaper fines, which will increase for repeated parking violations, both said.

Schmit and Holtzen are also taking building conditions into consideration. They said East Stadium, Eisenhower Hall and many other older buildings need new desks.

Following their campaign slogan, "Uniters not Dividers," the team is not apprehensive about handling diverse issues, they said.

"Neither of us are afraid to work hard, that's how we got to where we are now," Schmit said. "We're similar, but we do have different views so we can relate to a wide variety of opinions and views on subjects."

Schmit said they're truly dedicated to the people. They will take any serious concerns the students have into consideration.

"Bill and I are both the kind of guys that if we set our minds on something, we're going to accomplish that," Holtzen said.

"We're very dedicated to the job at hand."

Seniors to play final home game Saturday

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Seniors Kendra Wecker, Laurie Koehn, Megan Mahoney, Chelsea Domenico and Brie Madden will play the final home game of their collegiate careers Saturday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

Along with the retirement of Wecker's No. 53 jersey after the game and matching up against Sunflower in–state rival Kansas (12-13, 5-9), the emotions coming into the game are going to be the highest they have been all season.

This game has all the subplots, but one thing the Wildcats need to do is win to secure their spot as the fourth-ranked team in the Big 12 Conference.

"We know we need to finish these two games out to get in that top four," Mahoney said.

K-State (19-6, 10-4) needs to win its two remaining games in order to secure the fourth spot and a bye in the first round of the Big 12 tournament.

The Wildcats are currently tied with Iowa State for the final spot. The Cyclones edged out Missouri on Wednesday night 76-70 and finish conference play with their last two games at home against the ninth-place Jayhawks and eighth-place Texas A&M.

Under Big 12 rules, if two teams finish with the same record, the team that had a better record against its division opponents earns the tie-breaker.

K-State only lost one game against a North opponent – Iowa State. The Cyclones dropped two games in the Big 12 North, at K-State and at Nebraska.

"You're at a point in time in the season when every game is important because how it will position us as we head into the Big 12 Tournament," Coach Deb Patterson said.

The senior class has won 99 games in its career and individually holds five K-State all-time records.

"We want to go out of here on a high positive note playing here at Bramlage," Koehn said.

It's not going to be any different in respect to what we need to do and how we play, but at the same time it's definitely an emotional night for us seniors."

Wecker is the Wildcats' all-time leading rebounder (1,015), career leader in double-doubles with 47 and is only 59 points shy of passing former teammate Nicole Ohlde's 2,241 point record.

Koehn will finish her career as the Wildcat's all-time leader in three-point field goals made (368) and three-point field goals attempted (881). Koehn is currently ranked third all-time in Division 1.

Mahoney, K-State's all-time assist leader (570) will also pass Ohlde on Saturday for most career games started at K-State (123).

The seniors have not lost to Kansas in their careers, which included a 63-45 win in Lawrence earlier this season.

Wildcats seek 1st Big 12 title

Coach says squad has improved, but so has the rest of the conference

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After months of preparation, K-State's track and field team will discover how well it stacks up against the rest of the conference.

The Wildcats will compete in the Big 12 Conference Indoor Championships today and Saturday in Lincoln, Neb., in hopes of capturing their first Big 12 crown.

Senior triple jumper and team captain Chaytan Hill has been anxiously awaiting the conference meet.

"I don't doubt any of my teammates, so I say we can win it if we really, really put forth the effort," Hill said. "We have a lot of talented people on our team."

Hill, who finished second at the Big 12 meet last year, is favored to win her event as she leads the conference with an NCAA Indoor Championships automatic qualifying jump of 44-08 1/2.

Another Wildcat favored to win is junior weight thrower Coby Cost.

Cost, from El Dorado, Kan., was named the Big 12 Track and Field Athlete of the Week for his record-setting weight throw of 70-11 1/4 at last week's KSU Open.

Cost has won seven–straight weight throw titles on the year, and he said he expects his streak to continue.

"I am going to try and keep doing what I've done all season–just go out and throw it as far as I can throw it–and hopefully I can win," Cost said.

Three Wildcats will return to defend their conference titles including senior Joseph Lee (600-yard run), junior Christian Smith (1,000-meter run) and senior Tarl Vetter (weight throw).

In the 2004 Big 12 Indoor Championships, the K-State men's team finished second (77 points) and the women's team finished third (69 points).

K-State head coach Cliff Rovelto said he thinks both his teams are better than they were a year ago, but the competition is also better.

"Both of Nebraska's teams are very, very good," Rovelto said. "Texas is probably comparable to what they were last year. If (Texas) has a sub-par meet, then we will be able to go by them, but if they hit on all cylinders, it will be tough for us to beat them."

For the Wildcats to have a chance to place highly this weekend, Rovelto said his top athletes must perform to their capabilities.

"The conference has gotten to a point where there are so many people in each event competing at a high level that a second-tier type of kid used to be able to slip in and score, but that doesn't happen anymore," Rovelto said.

The women's team will compete without one of its primary scorers, sophomore sprinter Shunte Thomas, who injured her hamstring two weeks ago at the Iowa State Classic in Ames, Iowa.

"Losing (Thomas) is a big loss," Rovelto said. "Any way you want to slice it, we are probably looking at about 10 points less (since) we don't have her, and that 10 points will make a big difference.

K-State won its most recent of four conference championships in 1976 when it swept both the men's and women's Big 8 titles.

Wildcats to face Buffaloes Saturday, look to go 2-1 in 'new season'

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After a 57-42 loss at Iowa State on Feb. 15, K-State men's basketball coach Jim Wooldridge told his team to wipe the slate clean as it prepared to play its final five conference games.

"We left Iowa State and basically started over our mindset," Wooldridge said. "We said, 'start over; you're 0-0; here are your games ahead of you. We've got to be successful down the stretch."

That "new season" got off to a rocky start when the Wildcats fell 69-68 to Oklahoma last Saturday at home on a last-second shot, but they were able to bounce back with a 80-69 win over Baylor on Wednesday.

"We're a team that rebounds easily," said senior forward Jeremiah Massey, who scored a game-high 24 points in the win.

"We knew we had to come to practice and fix it. We didn't play a great game (Wednesday) against Baylor, but we came out with the win so we're happy."

The home win snapped a six-game losing streak and gave the Wildcats (14-10, 4-9) a positive spark after several weeks of losing and speculation about Wooldridge's future job status.

"The accumulation of the last few weeks have been tough on everybody," Wooldridge said.

K-State will get a chance to go to 2-1 in its "new season" Saturday, as the team travels to Boulder, Colo. to play Colorado (13-12, 4-9).

The Wildcats and Buffaloes share more similarities than their 10th-place conference standing.

Colorado head coach Ricardo Patton, in his 10th season, has also dealt with questions surrounding his future and the Buffaloes have had some turmoil of their own.

Patton suspended forwards Chris Copeland, Martane Freeman and Julius Ashby as well as guard Marcus Hall for Tuesday's 63-54 loss at Missouri for violating team rules.

All are expected to play on Saturday.

Sophomore guard Lance Harris said the Wildcats have to come out aggressive in Boulder.

"It's definitely hard playing on the road in the Big 12, so we can't come out on our heals," Harris said. "We've got to start out with a jump and finish with a punch."

Baseball | Wefald to appear on ESPN's "Cold Pizza"

K-State President Jon Wefald will be making an appearance on ESPN next week.

Wefald

Along with President of Warner Bros. domestic television distribution Dick Robertson, Wefald will be on ESPN's "Cold Pizza" to talk about the pair's proposed television miniseries on Negro League Baseball.

The "Cold Pizza" show will air from 7 to 9 a.m., Wednesday, March 2, on ESPN2 (Ch. 33).

The K-State Student Union will show the program live and then will air a replay from 9 to 11 a.m. on the food court dining area big screen. There will be a food special at the Union, as well.

Wefald has worked for several years to have a movie made on Negro League Baseball, and Robertson recently said that there are plans for a television miniseries on the legacy of black baseball players from that era that will air after the 2006 World Series.

NFL | Agent says Moss headed to Oakland Raiders

Randy Moss has become known as much for his distracting antics as he has for his electrifying touchdown catches during his seven-year career.

Moss

Sounds like Al Davis' kind of player.

Dante DiTrapano, Moss' agent, told The Associated Press on Wednesday that the Minnesota Vikings and Oakland Raiders had "come to an agreement on Randy playing for Oakland next year."

Davis, the longtime renegade owner of the Raiders, has always taken a certain pride in acquiring talented players with troubled backgrounds. Moss is just the latest to join the Silver and Black.

DiTrapano said Moss was "very pleased to be going to Oakland and looking forward to playing with a team that's promised to throw the ball deep a whole lot to him and have a chance at winning the Super Bowl."

Neither the Vikings nor the Raiders would confirm the deal, which reportedly involves the Raiders sending linebacker Napoleon Harris, the seventh pick in this year's draft and another late-round pick to Minnesota for Moss

NBA | Sacramento deals Webber to Philadelphia

Webber

Now, the Kings will find out whether they're really a better team without their cornerstone, and the Philadelphia 76ers will learn whether another superstar can thrive alongside Allen Iverson.

The Kings dealt Webber to the Sixers late Wednesday night in a six-player deal that dramatically reshaped both clubs on the eve of the trade deadline.

Philadelphia got Webber, one of the NBA's elite power forwards and a five-time All-Star, along with reserve forwards Matt Barnes and Michael Bradley. The Sixers gave up relatively little in return, sending veteran forwards Corliss Williamson, Kenny Thomas and Brian Skinner to the Kings.

NBA | Shaq has sprained knee, could return Saturday

Miami Heat All-Star center Shaquille O'Neal has a mildly sprained left knee and might play Saturday against the Orlando Magic.

An MRI exam confirmed a very mild sprain, the team said Thursday. O'Neal didn't comment to reporters waiting outside the hospital, and is listed as day to day.

He was injured in the first two minutes of Tuesday's game in Chicago when he leaped to catch a pass from Dwyane Wade and landed awkwardly atop Bulls forward Othella Harrington. O'Neal stayed on the court for several minutes, clearly in pain.

What do you wear under there?

Students share opinions on underwear preferences for themselves, opposite sex

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Other than dress clothes, guys' and girls' outerwear isn't really all that different.

We both have closets full of sweatshirts, basic T-shirts and pairs of jeans and khakis. But when you peel those layers away, it is a whole 'nother ball game.

Underwear is very different between the sexes.

One probably won't find an entire store dedicated to men's underwear anywhere in the mall, and what is acceptable on girls will bring about shudders of disgust when any mention is made of guys wearing the same thing.

An overwhelming amount of girls backed up this statement.

"When a guy wears a G-string, that's just a definite 'no-no,'" said Megan Herz, freshman in animal sciences and industry/pre-vet.

"It doesn't really matter what guys wear, boxers or 'tighty-whiteys,' as long as they are changed regularly," said Herz.

However, most other girls are very adamant about seeing men wear boxers.

"I like boxers, anything else is just kind of weird," said Sheridan Larson, sophomore in secondary education.

"I don't want to see them in a thong. That's just wrong."

Megan Hopkins, junior in art/photography said she agreed.

"I like to see guys in boxers. I like cute boxers, ones with little stripes or some cool design," she said.

Lindsay Cook, freshman in secondary education, took Hopkins' statement even further by telling of her disgust for certain boxers.

"I have a friend with Woody Woodpecker underwear, I don't like it at all," Cook said.

"I don't like to see underwear with cartoon characters."

When asked what type of underwear they prefer to wear, the girls were very responsive.

"I like to wear the string bikini-cut underwear," Hopkins said.

"I also like the little boy-cut ones, those are cute, but I don't like lace anything – it's really itchy."

To the disappointment of many guys reading this, most girls only wear thongs on special occasions.

"I'll wear the occasional thong; it depends on whether or not I care if my underwear shows with what I wear," Hopkins said. Herz said she'll wear a thong when she is dressing up or "if it's the last thing I have in the drawer."

Cook has a different approach to what she wears underneath her clothes.

"Underwear is overrated. I don't like to wear anything, it's more fun not to, like a little naughty secret that I have and no one else knows," Cook said.

The same questions were posed to the opposite sex, and they too were very responsive.

Most guys like to see (or imagine) women wearing thongs, but not Matt Lewis, senior in secondary education.

"I don't like thongs because a lot of girls just can't pull it off," Lewis said.

Jeff Nutsch, sophomore in computer engineering, told of his preferences as well.

"Definitely not granny panties; thongs are hot, but other than that, most anything is alright," he said.

Jason Stuchlik, senior in political science, shared the same feeling as Nutsch.

"Thongs are good, but it doesn't really make a whole lot of difference," he said.

All of the guys interviewed preferred boxers to briefs because they are more comfortable.

"I like to wear boxers because they feel better and are less constricting," Lewis said.

Like the majority of those surveyed, it is best to make comfort number one when choosing underwear for yourself, just make sure you follow your mother's advice and change it every day.

'Ray,' 'The Aviator' top Academy Award picks

By Marcus Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Awards season is upon us, and the most important movie awards of all is the Academy Awards. So, before the big show happens, here are the people and films most likely to win for their work in 2004.

In the leading actor category, Jamie Foxx is definitely the front runner for his performance as Ray Charles in "Ray." Leonardo DiCaprio also has a chance for his performance as business tycoon Howard Hughes in "The Aviator." The dark horse for this category is Don Cheadle for his performance as refugee-rescuing hotel owner Paul Rusesabagina in "Hotel Rwanda." Jamie Foxx has been picking up awards for his performance at other awards shows, and he is essentially a lock for this statue.

Fast facts

The Academy Awards

■ 7 p.m. Sunday on ABC

The supporting actor category is wide open, with the only real front runner being Thomas Haden Church for "Sideways," in which he plays a 40-year-old manchild who needs to grow up. Jamie Foxx is also nominated in this category for his cabbie-held-hostage role in "Collateral." Also watch out for Morgan Freeman, who plays Clint Eastwood's long-time friend in "Million Dollar Baby."

The leading actress category is pretty much dominated by Hilary Swank's rough performance as a female boxer in "Million Dollar Baby." But, be on the look out for Kate Winslet, who is nominated for "Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind."

In the supporting-actress column, Virginia Madsen, who has been around for the past 20 years, finally found a role to sink her teeth into. She is nominated for "Sideways," in which she plays waitress and love interest Maya. There is also a chance for Natalie Portman in "Closer" and Laura Linney in "Kinsey."

The category of best picture is going to be interesting this year. "The Aviator," "Sideways" and "Million Dollar Baby" all have a shot this year. Put your money on Clint Eastwood's "Million Dollar Baby," which came out of nowhere in December to be at the top of many critics' best-of-the-year lists.

No matter who wins the awards this year, Oscar parties are a fun way to spend a Sunday night. So, grab some friends and some snacks, fill out your Oscar ballot and hope that your picks win.

Textbook prices continue to rise

By Gina Ninemire
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Textbooks are a large expense for students, and prices seem to be on the rise.

Bruce Hildebrand, executive director of higher education for the American Association of Publishers, said textbook prices are increasing, but so is inflation.

"Like with anything, prices increase with time, and keep in mind that the average college student actually spends more on his or her cell phone than textbooks in a year."

However, Jennifer Libertowski, coordinator for the National Association of College Stores, said there has been a slight steady increase in textbook prices over the last four years.

Hildebrand said technology has improved book content. Books are bundled with CDs and study guides that could be optional, and the American Association of Publishers are offering these items "a la carte."

Colby Greer, junior in kinesiology, said he rarely uses the CDs included with the book, unless they are an assigned requirement. Greer said that the average cost of his books for a semester is $300 to $400.

Hildebrand also said that the demand for different editions from instructors elevates price.

Wendy Barnes, English instructor, said she considers the price of books, among other things, when assigning books.

"When making a curriculum choice, I go through many books to decide what is the best curriculum for the course I am teaching," she said.

Steve Levin, co-owner of Varney's Bookstore, said he tries to help relieve students from the cost of textbooks.

"Our stance recognizes student's needs of less expensive textbooks, and we communicate these kind of views to publishers, as well as maximizing textbook life by the re-selling of books," he said.

School forced to change servers after infiltration

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Network servers for the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications were compromised by an unknown person from the Netherlands Wednesday.

Associate director of the school, Charles Pearce, said he was contacted by Computing and Network Services about a problem with the server Wednesday night.

"They had been compromised and taken over by someone in the Netherlands who had them doing IRC," he said.

IRC stands for Internet Relay Chat. According to www.webopedia.com, IRC is a method of chatting with others by connecting to networks through servers. Instead of a two person chat, users are able to join chat channels where many people can chat at once. IRC allows users to access the different chat channels from any IRC server.

Since the server was compromised, the school of journalism had to move everything off the server onto a new server, Pearce said. Although everything on the server had to be moved, he said it was not as bad as it could have been.

"We were going to migrate to a new server anyway, but we were going to wait until this weekend to do it so there would be nobody trying to access it," Pearce said.

However, the school must work quickly to get everything onto the new server. In an e-mail sent to the school of journalism, students were warned of possible server outages.

"We are hoping that those are going to be few and far between, but there will be time when we are changing from one server to another that people won't have access to a server," Pearce said.

The e-mail also stated that passwords to activate the server will be changed; however, Pearce said they are working to prevent that. Faculty members are supposed to send the passwords they have for their classes to the server administrator so that he can configure them to the same password.

Pearce said no files were lost when the server was compromised, so all student work is safe.

Senate discusses same-sex marriage ban

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate discussed opposing the ban on same-sex marriage in Kansas Thursday night. The ban is scheduled to be on the April 5 state ballot.

The opposition-resolution was introduced into legislation, but won't be voted on until next week's meeting.

Before legislation is read or discussed, a member of the senate has to move to consider it.

That was done, but before it was voted on, there was a motion to oppose considering the resolution, which ultimately failed. However, there was more than a third of the body against considering it. Two-thirds was needed.

Part of the reason some members of Student Governing Association want to oppose the ban is because it allows discrimination, Senator Jason Heaser said.

"We believe that it would promote actions of a non-inclusive nature," he said.

Sarah Laib, chair of Senate operations committee, said discrimination does happen in Kansas in the workforce.

"People can currently be fired for sexual orientation," Laib said.

Whether or not Senate was representing the entire student body of K-State brought some discussion.

"It is written along the lines of representing the body," Heaser said.

Senate Chair Eleri Griffin said it is possible to have a resolution that just represents the Student Governing Association if specified.

Senator Vicki Conner said Senate always represents K-State students.

"We're elected to represent the students, so I think it is impossible for us to not represent the student body," she said.

In other business, KanDance was allocated $1,000 to travel to a conference.

The Muslim Student Association received $1,250 to sponsor a speech by Ibrahim Al-Daramally, with the Islamic Center of Boca Raton, Fla., about the divine purposes of prophets next week.

"This is a great opportunity to bring a diverse speaker to campus," Senator Ben Procter said. "I'm excited, and I encourage you to be excited as well."

Wildcats ready for tournament

Demon Classic to offer test

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team travels to Louisiana this weekend in hopes of extending its two-game winning streak.

The Wildcats (2-3) will begin action in the Northwestern State University Demon Classic at 4 p.m. today against Northwestern.

K-State has started off the season well offensively and is currently fourth in the Big 12 Conference in hitting at .317.

Senior outfielder Terry Blunt is helping to lead the offense with a solid start. Through the first five games Blunt is the top Wildcat in many offensive categories with his .476 batting average, 10 hits, one triple, 13 total bases and two stolen bases.

Blunt also has the Big 12's fourth-longest hitting streak at eight games.

"I'm just relaxing at the plate and trying to slow the game down," Blunt said. "I'm just trying to learn from every at–bat."

Head Coach Brad Hill is pleased with Blunt's performance so far.

"He is off to a very good start," Hill said. "He has been getting quality at-bats and has been solid so far."

As for the rest of the offense, there are still areas for improvement.

"We are seeing some baserunning mistakes," Hill said. "We are trying to get the guys to understand what types of swings to take in different situations."

K-State's defense is also hoping to improve over the weekend.

Eli Rumler watches the ball as it comes into the strike zone during a game against Buffalo at Tointon Family Stadium. The Wildcats travel to Louisiana to play in the Northwestern State Tournament this weekend.

"We have been working on some defensive things this week," Hill said. "We are just trying to help them stay sharp on the field."

Hill said the starting pitching is looking better.

"We are getting some quality starts," Hill said. "They looked exceptional last weekend."

Junior Adam Cowart (1-0) pitched his first start in Texas last weekend. Cowart went eight innings and got the win over Northwestern, giving up just one unearned run in the first inning while striking out four and walking none.

Senior Mitch Walter (1-0), who looks to get the start today, pitched six innings, giving up four runs–three earned–on six hits while striking out two and walking two on the way to his first win.

"This weekend I just want to come out and get some ground balls," Walter said. "I just want to keep us in the game."

Overall, Blunt said the Wildcats are starting to come together.

"All along there has been no question that this team has the talent," Blunt said. "Absolutely, we are getting better and we are starting to see what we can do."

Walter said he could not agree more.

"We are starting to find out some things," Walter said. "Guys are starting to fit into their roles."

K-State begins actions at 4 p.m. against Northwestern State (4-4). K-State also faces Eastern Michigan 9-1) at noon Saturday and Northern Iowa (2-1) at 10 a.m. Sunday.

"This looks to be a very good tourney," Hill said. "They are all good teams and have been playing well so far this year."

Women's tennis team prepares for home match

By Chris Patch
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After almost two weeks since its last match, the K-State women's tennis team is gearing up for a home match against Utah, followed by Southwest Missouri State on Saturday.

The Wildcats (1-3) are in need of a win after losing two-straight road matches to Ole Miss and Arkansas. The two losses put the Wildcats on a three-match losing streak, one that the Wildcats hope will be snapped.

Head Coach Steve Bietau said he thought the long break helped mend some injuries suffered early in the season and gave the team a chance to work on areas of their game.

"Well, we've been a little beat up – ranging from Olga Klimova with a torn ACL, obviously being the most severe, and just some other minor injuries", he said. "So, the break has been good from that standpoint, and we've also been able to spend some time working on areas that came up during our matches."

Klimova injured her ACL in a singles match this season against Brigham Young University. Before the injury, Klimova had won four straight matches, the longest winning streak on the team. She is not expected to return to action this year.

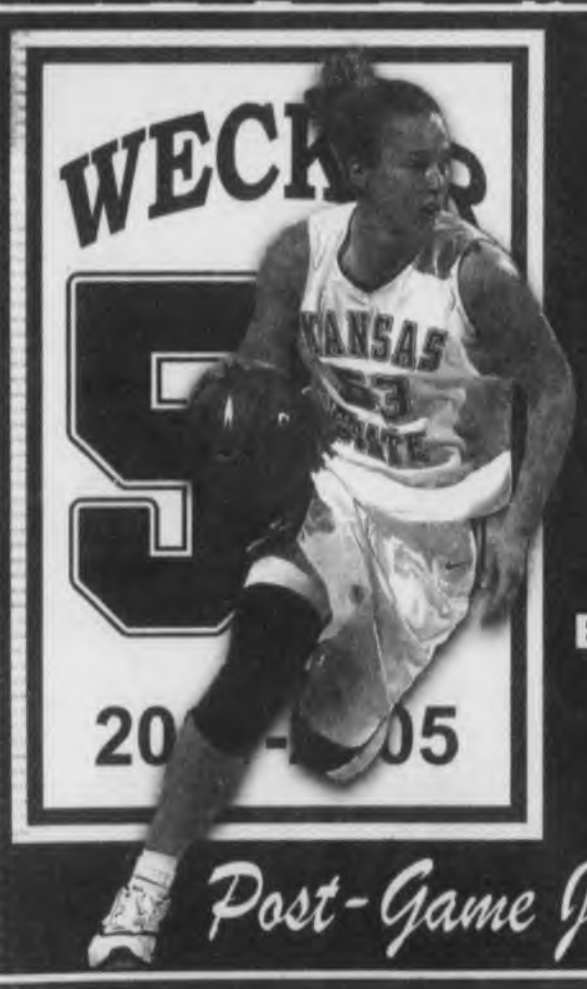
The problem areas for K-State with Klimova out early in the season have been consistency, and putting away close matches. Two of the three losses this season were 4-3, both with K-State winning the doubles point.

Bietau said he has not seen the kind of consistency from his team thus far that would put the Wildcats in a position to win those kinds of matches.

"We're trying to get as many people playing well at the same time as we possibly can", he said. "Remember the fact that we've got three freshman playing."

As far as getting ready for Utah, the Wildcats have prepared the same way they have all season.

Bietau said he is looking for a better collective effort from the squad and more senior leadership.



"Well, our approach to any match doesn't change all that much," Bietau said. "We're focusing on trying to play sharper, trying to get more people playing well at the same time. We're trying to build on the strengths that we have had. Maria Rosenberg is playing awfully well, and our doubles, we've played pretty well there. We're just trying to help our younger players along and looking for the older players to lead the way for them."

Senior Maria Rosenberg has been the leader for K-State so far this season. Her straight–sets win over Arkansas' Maryori Franco put her within six wins of the career singles win record.

Speaker to discuss cancer

By Melissa Baier
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Johnson Center for Basic Cancer Research will discuss the newest cancer treatment findings during a lecture series Monday.

Joe Gray will present the latest research and various treatments for breast cancer in a lectured entitled, "Promising New Approaches to Breast Cancer Classification and Treatment." The lecture will be at 7 p.m. Monday in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Students with special interests in these fields will find Gray's lecture very informative, said Marcia Locke, special assistant for the cancer research center. Others may attend for more personal reasons.

"Some will go because breast cancer has touched their lives in some way and they want to see what's coming," Locke said.

Gray will be attending ceremonies honoring him as a 2005 Alumni Fellow in the college of arts and sciences. After Gray was notified of his Fellow status, the cancer research center approached him about participating in their lecture series, George S. Bascom Memorial Workshop Series on Current Issues in Clinical Medicine.

In conjunction with his lecture at the cancer research center, Gray will also give a lecture for the department of physics, "A Random Walk from Physics to Cancer Biology," at 4:30 p.m. March 1 in Cardwell 102.

Gray received his doctoral degree in nuclear physics at K-State in 1972. Currently, Gray is the program leader of cancer genetics and breast oncology at the University of California-San Francisco Comprehensive Cancer Center. He also serves as the director of the division of life sciences at the Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory.

Since 1980, the cancer research center has been devoted to providing K-State scientists with the funds necessary to conduct their research and to help educate students with biological and medical interests.

Wichita leader to address diversity

By Maria Nilges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kevin Myles will speak about the importance of remembering black history and diversity this weekend.

Myles, president of the Wichita National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, will present from 5 to 7 p.m. Sunday.

Myles' speech will coincide with the theme of this year's Black History Month at K-state, "Reliving Our Past is Revolutionizing our Future."

Kendra Spencer, Black Student Union president and junior in sociology, encouraged all students and Manhattan residents to attend the lecture.

"Myles can offer people a better understanding of black history and help us appreciate diversity around campus as well as around Manhattan," she said.

Joel Pearson, graduate assistant in the multicultural center, said he hopes Myles' speech will inspire students to be more involved in their communities.

"I hope he helps students understand the necessity of taking responsibility for what's going on around campus and in the surrounding the communities," he said.

Manhattan starts wiffleball league

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A backyard neighborhood game has found its way indoors, giving adults an alternative to the huffing and puffing needed to play competitive basketball.

A competitive wiffleball league sponsored by the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department is in its second year. Games are played on Sunday and Tuesday nights at the Community House, located on 120 N. Fourth St. Registration ends Monday.

Wiffle ball is similar to baseball, but played with a hollow ball.

Matt McClure, recreation supervisor heading up the wiffleball league, said 14 teams competed last year.

"We play our games at the Community House, and there are some subtle differences as to how it might be played elsewhere," McClure said. Players pitch to their own teams, and there is no running of the bases – zones are taped off in the gym determining the point value of hits."

Teams consist of a minimum of three players and can be coed. The age requirement is 18-years-old, or having graduated high school. The maximum number of players a team can have is six, yet only three can take the field defensively.

League games are played to seven innings or 30 minutes, whichever comes first.

With no runners running on the bases, two points are awarded if a fair ball is hit past the point line on the floor but not caught.

The gym has additional higher scoring opportunities as well. Four points are awarded if the ball is hit in the air past the designated spot and not caught, and six points are awarded if the wiffleball hits the backboard on the basketball hoop.

Many of the participants found the league to be quite different from what they expected, yet pleasurable all the same.

"It was more fun than exercise; there just is something about doing something fun and kind of silly that brings out the best in people of a community," said Allie Loush, who is a member of a team called the Isotopes.

Participants vary in degree of fitness, some who are active decathlon contestants while others are looking for a simple opportunity to have some fun.

"There definitely is enough competition to make it interesting, and yet the recreation department does a terrific job at providing opportunities like this for the community to build character," Loush said.

Unlike most athletic competitions where fitness level and age can be a great disparity, wiffleball does not have those discrepancies.

Chris Bunnell, a supervisor of last year's games, said the games are very laid back but entertaining all the same.

"It is a very equalizing sport; it works well at allowing people of all age groups to compete on the same field," Bunnell said. "With what wind is in the gym the air carries the ball naturally in all directions, so scores end up being high. What makes it competitive is that many of the people play in other leagues such as softball and they just basically want to win."

Register for wiffleball

Deadline: Monday, Feb. 28
Where: Parks and Recreation Department, 1101 Fremont St.
Cost: $60 per team

Pope recovering

By Victor L. Simpson
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pope John Paul II underwent a successful operation Thursday night to insert a tube in his throat to relieve his breathing problems, hours after he was rushed back to the hospital for the second time in a month with flu-like symptoms of fever and congestion, the Vatican said.

The pope was conscious and back in his hospital room late Thursday, breathing with the help of a respirator, the Italian news agency ANSA reported.

A top aide to Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi who visited the pope said John Paul was "serene" after waking up from the anesthesia.

The pope raised his hand and attempted to speak with doctors but was told not to try, Cabinet Undersecretary Gianni Letta told reporters at Gemelli Polyclinic Hospital in Rome.

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls said the tracheotomy lasted 30 minutes and the outcome was "positive."

The pope had approved the procedure, which the Vatican characterized as elective – underscoring that it was not done as an emergency measure.

The frail, 84-year-old pontiff, who was taken to the hospital shortly before 11 a.m. in an ambulance, will be spending the night in his hospital room, Navarro-Valls said.

But the tracheotomy may require a longer hospital stay and have serious consequences for the pope's abilities to carry out his duties since he will not be able to speak, at least initially, while the breathing tube is in his throat.

Attorney general wants abortion clinic records

By John Milburn
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

In an investigation conducted secretly for months, the Kansas attorney general is demanding that clinics turn over the complete medical records of nearly 90 women and girls who had abortions.

Two abortion clinics are fighting the request in Kansas Supreme Court, saying the state has no right to such personal information. But Attorney General Phill Kline said Thursday he is simply enforcing state law.

"I have the duty to investigate and prosecute child rape and other crimes in order to protect Kansas children," Kline, an abortion opponent, said.

Kline is seeking the records of girls who had abortions and women who received late-term abortions.

Sex involving someone under 16 is illegal in Kansas, and it is illegal in the state for doctors to perform an abortions after 22 weeks unless there is reason to believe it is needed to protect the mother's health.

Kline spoke to reporters after details of the investigation, which began in October, surfaced in a legal brief filed by attorneys for two medical clinics.

The clinics said Kline demanded their complete medical records for women who sought abortions at least 22 weeks into their pregnancies in 2003, as well as those for girls 15 and younger who sought abortions.

Iraqi attacks leaves 30 people, 2 U.S. soldiers dead

By Todd Pitman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A suicide bomber wearing a police uniform blew up his car at police headquarters in Tikrit, killing at least 15 people in Saddam Hussein's hometown in the bloodiest of several attacks Thursday that claimed 30 lives. Two American soldiers were among the dead.

The suicide bombings and other attacks came as politicians negotiated behind the scenes to forge the alliances needed to win enough backing in the 275-seat National Assembly for the post of prime minister.

The U.S. command said two American soldiers were killed and two wounded in separate bomb attacks, one northeast of Baghdad in Qaryat, and a second near Samarra, west of Qaryat.

In the Sunni Arab stronghold of Tikrit, 80 miles north of Baghdad, a man dressed as a police lieutenant drove through the station's gates and blew himself up just as dozens of policemen were arriving to relieve colleagues who had worked through the night, police Col. Saad Daham said.

"He waited until the shift change, then he exploded the car," Daham said, adding the aim was "to kill as many as possible." At least 22 people were wounded.

Twenty cars were set ablaze after by the blast, sending up clouds of smoke. An Associated Press photographer saw at least 10 charred bodies on the ground, which was splattered with pools of blood.

A suicide bomber killed five other people in Iskandariyah, 30 miles south of the capital, when he blew himself up in front of the local headquarters of a key Shiite alliance member, the Shiite Supreme Council for the Islamic Revolution in Iraq.

Police initially said the attack targeted the police chief, Col. Salman Ali, who escaped unharmed.

In Baghdad, gunmen fired on a bakery, killing two people and wounding a third, police said. Several blasts echoed through the capital at midday and several more after nightfall. Their cause was not known.

Two roadside bombs in Qaim, near the Syrian border, killed four Iraqi National Guardsmen, Iraqi Lt. Col. Abid Ajab Al-Salmani said.

Elsewhere, insurgents ambushed a police patrol in the northern city of Kirkuk with a roadside bomb, killing two policemen and injuring three.

U.S. Marines and Iraqi troops, meanwhile, pressed a joint operation to root out insurgents in parts of the so-called Sunni triangle. The military said it detained 17 suspected insurgents and seized several weapons caches.

Politicians of all stripes sought out representatives of Iraq's Sunni minority, whose support they need to isolate the insurgency. Many insurgents are thought to be loyalists of Saddam's outlawed Sunni-dominated Baath Party.

Palestine chooses Cabinet; almost half have doctorates

By Mohammed Daraghmeh
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nearly half of the 24 ministers joining a new Palestinian Cabinet on Thursday hold doctorates – many earned at topflight universities in the United States or elsewhere in the West.

The new lineup of doctors, lawyers, engineers and economists embrace a one-word credo – reform – in sharp contrast to the outgoing body of Yasser Arafat cronies.

After swearing-in his new ministers late Thursday, Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas told reporters, "They are young and professional ... We have chosen them very carefully."

The Cabinet revolution, spurred by lawmakers' demand for a clean sweep of the political hacks associated with Arafat's corruption-plagued regime, signaled the decade-old Palestinian Authority is ready for a new era.

The Cabinet has an economist heading the Finance Ministry, a physician as health minister and a statistician as labor minister. By contrast, the outgoing Cabinet featured an Arafat crony as interior minister, a local affairs minister who purportedly got rich skimming government contracts and the widow of a famed Palestinian fighter who is best known for her frequent appearances in corruption reports.

The new Cabinet reflected the priorities of Abbas, who has pledged to clean up Palestinian politics as he embarks on a renewed peace track with Israel following four years of bloody conflict.

The Palestinian Legislative Council approved the new Cabinet Thursday by a vote of 54-12.

"It's a turning point in the rationale, the approach and the methodology of forming Cabinets, in going beyond political patronage ... and to look for people who can deliver," said legislator Hanan Ashrawi, who has long clamored for reform.

Among the key appointments is Nasser Yousef, a tough ex-general, as interior minister charged with overseeing security reform and trying to rein in Palestinian militants. He replaces Hakam Bilawi, who saw his job as turning control of security forces back to Arafat.

Nasser Al-Kidwa, the former Palestinian representative to the United Nations, was chosen as foreign minister.

to watch what he eats.

"I try to eat more protein," he said.

"Even so, I try to watch what I eat in general."

Along with helping students maintain a healthy diet, students involved in the program are given a personal workout schedule based on their own personal needs.

Ahern said he enjoys the spring break training program because he is able to get on a schedule that tells him which areas of his body he should work out.

The schedule tells them when and how much to run, lift weights, do abdominal workouts and cardiovascular workouts.

Rice said the program gives him that little extra push to go get fit.

"It gives me a little more will power and a willingness to do stuff," he said.

Gehlen said the program is for students to learn how to exercise regularly and live a healthy lifestyle.

Enrollment in the spring break training program is closed this year, but the same opportunity will be given to students who are interested next year.

Even so, there are personal consultants at the Wellness Center, which is open daily from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Parker said he's not sure who wrote it.

"A member of our team most definitely wrote, 'boring,' with an arrow pointing towards their name," he said.

Part of the penalty for defacing Burns' campaign materials was to write a letter of apology.

Burns said he received the note, and that's when he found out about it.

"I didn't even know about it until they handed me the note," he said. "It's really not a big deal to me."

Joelle Mausolf, chair of the Election Review Committee, said she doesn't know the particulars of the case, but if Parker appeals today, they hope to review it on Sunday.

"We just have to look at the facts of the case and hear both sides," she said. "We don't make any decisions until we hear all sides of the story."

Also, Burns and Groene, along with presidential candidate pair Andrew Treaster and David Hart, were written citations for illegal chalking. Engineering senator candidate Scott Keller also was given a citation for illegal chalking.

All three chalked on a cement plant holder, which goes against election regulations because it is not an area were people commonly walk.

McCandless said candidates are written up every year.

"It's common every year," he said.

competitive," Cadena said.

It is still unclear how the sale will affect those employed in Wichita and Tulsa, a total of 9,000 people, 7,200 of whom are in Wichita.

Nigel Wright, another managing director of Onex, said the goal is to create a stronger company, which in turn will create more jobs and job security.

"The Wichita and Oklahoma employees have tremendous talent and experience," Wright said.

"We need to combine their skills with a better cost structure, then diversify our customer base."

Both sides stressed that the purpose of the sale wasn't to shrink the Wichita/Tulsa division, but to make it grow.

"We share a common goal, which is to give this business what it needs to stand on its to be a world class competitor," Seth Mirsky, managing director of Onex, said, "and to move from an environment where jobs have been declining to where we're going to start growing jobs here."

The sale of the Wichita/Tulsa division will be complete in the second quarter of this year.

Suspect confesses to BTK killings

31 years later, Wichita police arrest suspect

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After years of investigation, Wichita police have arrested a man they believe to be the notorious BTK serial killer.

Rader
BTK SUSPECT

Wichita officials announced the arrest of Dennis Rader, 59, of Park City, Kan., in connection with at least 10 murders, at a news conference Saturday morning.

"The bottom line: BTK is arrested," Police Chief said as the room erupted in cheers and tears.

Reports indicate DNA evidence led to the arrest. Rader was the president of a Lutheran church and Cub Scout leader.

BTK – bind, torture, kill – was connected to eight murders between 1974 and 1986 in Wichita. Police announced he has also been connected to two more killings in Park City, 15 miles north of Wichita.

Rader is being held at an undisclosed location on a $10 million bond. Charges have not been filed. Rader is expected to appear in court today or Tuesday.

Because the murders happened before the death penalty was instituted in Kansas in 1994, Rader, if convicted, will not be subject to capital punishment.

"Victims whose voices were brutally silenced by the evil of one man will now have their voices heard again," Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline said.

Late Sunday, the Associated Press quoted an anonymous source as saying Rader had confessed to at least

Parker, Schirer disqualified

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Election Review Committee disqualified presidential candidate pair Jeremy Parker and Dustin Schirer Sunday.

The pair received four citations for minor campaign violations. Three minor violations equal one major violation.

The committee met at 10:30 a.m. Sunday to go over the case. Parker attended the meeting alone.

Parker and Schirer were written up for unauthorized removal of another campaign's material, chalking within 30 feet of a campus building, not securing their campaign signs on all four corners and overlaying their sign on another candidate's sign.

ELECTIONS 2005

Voting for Student Governing Association primary elections begins 8 a.m. Tuesday and ends 6 p.m. Wednesday. Vote at www.k-state.edu/elections.

Joelle Mausolf, committee chair, said Parker acted like they weren't wrong to commit the violations.

"They did them, and they just didn't feel like they were a big deal," Mausolf, junior in political science, said. "We felt there was a lack of disrespect for the judicial system and the electoral process."

Detectives describe blood traces

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Detectives on Friday described how they searched for traces of blood in the garage and car of a K-State professor charged with killing his former wife.

English professor Thomas Murray, 48, of Manhattan, is charged with first-degree murder in the death of Carmin D. Ross, 40, at her home near Lawrence in November 2003.

According to testimony from two detectives, a glow-in-the-dark chemical called luminol helped police identify possible traces of blood on the steering wheel of Murray's car and on the armrest on the driver's-side door, as well as the floor of Murray's Manhattan garage.

Police Sgt. Dan Ward, who searched Murray's garage, testified that luminol is used to help spot crime scene areas that should be swabbed and sent for further testing.

No one testified Friday about the results of the lab tests of samples taken from glowing areas, but Ward said one

GlobalFlyer to take off in Salina

GlobalFlyer

K-State-Salina is participating in an attempt by a GlobalFlyer airplane pilot to fly solo around the world without refueling.

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

SALINA, Kan. – The Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer will take off today from Salina Municipal Airport in an attempt to set the world record for the first nonstop solo flight around the world.

Pilot Steve Fossett will navigate the GlobalFlyer on a pre-approved set route in the jet stream at an altitude of 37,000 feet.

The plane has gone through months of preparation, with its first flight dating back to March 2004. Since then, it has been flown for a total of about 100 hours – 30 of those by Fossett himself.

The plane arrived in Salina in January 2004 and has been waiting for take off for more than three months after several delays due to weather.

Fossett said despite the elongated waiting period before takeoff, he is nervous.

"Takeoff is indeed very scary," he said. "Takeoff with a plane this heavy and there are consequences of something going wrong."

Weather – including turbulence, temperature, air moisture and wind direction – will affect just how well the plane will fly.

"There is a very little margin for things like turbulence," he said.

The route

Although members of the GlobalFlyer team may be able to postpone the flight takeoff due to inadequate weather conditions, once Fossett is in the air, there is no looking back.

"I am required to fly a course that I have declared to fly," he said, "but, if there is major weather blockage, I must fly course."

Along with weather conditions that may arise, the weight of the fuel is also a concern.

The takeoff attempt will be the first time the plane has been filled to its fuel capacity. The heaviest the plane has weighed in flight is 19,000 pounds, about one and a half tons less than the capacity of 22,000 pounds, Fossett said.

Mission control was revealed to the media Sunday by the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer team. Four K-State-Salina students will be participating in mission control, where they will track the plane's flight path and communicate with Fossett.

During the roughly 70-hour flight, Fossett will be in a cabin that is three feet in wide and seven feet long. He will face many physical challenges, including eating diet milk shakes, urinating through a tube and defecating into a collection bag.

Sleep will also be a challenge. Fossett said he will be using autopilot just in case.

"It is a primary tool," he said. Earplugs designed with speakers in them will allow mission control to wake Fossett if he does fall asleep.

Fossett said his motivation is not only to advance aviation. "I'm doing it for very personal reasons, for self-esteem and the personal satisfaction of making an achievement," he said.

TAMPA, Fla. – Terri Schiavo's feeding tube will stay in place three weeks longer after a Florida judge extended a court order to keep the brain-damaged woman alive Friday.

Pinellas Circuit Court Judge George Greer made his decision after pleadings from the 41-year-old woman's parents, Bob and Mary Schindler, who want court protection to keep their son-in-law, Michael Schiavo, from removing the feeding tube. Michael Schiavo says he is seeking to carry out his wife's wishes not to be kept alive artificially.

KOCH/BOECKMAN

Joshua Koch and Lindsey Boeckman are challenging all students to take an active role on campus.

The president and vice president candidates for K-State's Salina campus are basing their platform on "challenge the process."

"We would like to see a leadership studies minor instated on our campus, as we have many great leaders that will be able to benefit from this," Koch, junior in technology management, said.

"One of the most important things we would like to see is free legal advice for students on campus," Boeckman, sophomore in airplane science, said.

Both Koch and Boeckman said a main topic for K-State-Salina is the development of a Student Life Center.

"We want to make sure that the students are given the chance to have an active voice," Koch said.

Koch's past leadership experiences include memberships in Cat Cannon, Mini Baja, SME and Ambassadors.

He founded the entrepreneurial club, and he is currently president of the organization. He has served as a Student Governing Association intern, mechanical engineering technology senator and currently is vice president at Salina.

Boeckman's past leadership experiences include treasurer of Flight Team and an active member of Women in Aviation, and a professional piloting license.

"With my experience and Lindsey's fresh ideas, we will make a very diverse team," Koch said.

HAIDUK/GORRELL

Also running for president and vice president are Brendan Haiduk and Nathan Gorrell.

Gorrell, junior in the professional pilot program, was originally planning on running for president, but when he learned Haiduk was running for president, he volunteered to run with him so they can accomplish what they both want.

Haiduk and Gorrell's platform is based on communication.

"Since I came to Salina, I've seen a lack of communication between faculty and staff and the students," said Haiduk, sophomore in airway science in the professional pilot program.

If elected, the pair plans to give an oral presentation at least once a semester addressing the current state of the campus.

Haiduk and Gorrell would also establish a weekly forum that would address issues at K-State-Salina.

Haiduk said these would be compiled along with replies from SGA, the dean or any other authority and then sent to the campus as a whole.

Haiduk's leadership experiences include resident assistant, ambassador, SGA Pilot Senator and Alpha Eta Rho activities director.

Gorrell's past leadership experiences include SGA Senator, Resident Hall Association president, Women in Aviation treasurer and Phi Delta Theta historian.

He is currently a member of Phi Delta Theta, Student Senate Chair for SGA and ambassador for the College of Technology and Aviation.

"Between my running mate and myself, we have combined experience that outweighs the other running pairs," Gorrell said.

Pair aspires to give students more

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Presidential and vice presidential candidates Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner want to give students more.

With a slogan of "Get Moore," Moore, junior in information systems, and Wagner, sophomore in management information systems, are campaigning with a three-point platform. If elected, the pair promises to give students more options, more accountability and more for their money.

The pair said the most important issue in their campaign was tuition. Moore and Wagner are promising to keep tuition increases below 10 percent for the next year.

Moore
PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

Wagner
VICE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

Moore said experience with university administration and Kansas Board of Regents is where the pair differs from other candidate pairs on the issue.

"The new president and vice president of K-State will have to move very quickly to provide input on tuition that's being set for next year," Moore said. "With that experience that Matt and I have, we've already been talking to them; they already know where we stand."

The pair also differs from other candidates on the parking garage issue. Moore said students should vote on the issue to illustrate student support before deciding to build a garage.

Constant communication is another point the pair promises to students if elected, by meeting with two student organizations every week to keep communication flowing.

"Being directly connected to the student body as an elected official is incredibly important," Moore said. "Matt and I are promising that we will stay directly connected with students for the entire term."

Wagner said the pair would pursue these issues quickly, along with setting up online teacher evaluations and improving graduate student health insurance. Wagner said they have a plan for every goal, and every goal can be achieved.

"All of the goals that we set forth are goals that are attainable and will become a reality if Tyson and I are elected," Wagner said.

The pair said their campaign has been going well, and both are looking forward to elections.

"We're both really excited for the elections," Moore said. "A lot of students have come up to us, and they're excited about voting and getting their voice heard."

Candidates address parking, tuition increase

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Each presidential candidate pair has their own platform or set of issues they want to accomplish during their term if elected – but there are some shared issues.

Parking, tuition or both are issues on all candidate platforms.

K-State has experienced a tuition increase for the past few years.

For the 2002-03 year it was a 25-percent increase, a 20-percent increase in 2003-04, and there was a 17.1-percent increase for this year.

Hayley Urkevich, student body president, said it will likely be a 9.9-percent increase for next year. She said part of her job is meeting with administration and the Kansas Board of Regents.

This year, she and Vice President Erik Ankrom worked with administration to set the increase at lower than 10 percent, a decision favored by the administration as well as students.

"It's hard to really say what would've happened had they not wanted the same thing," Urkevich said.

Ankrom said Student Governing Association may not directly affect tuition, but the president and vice president can have influence. He said they meet often with administration such as Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco and Vice President Tom Rawson.

Vicki Conner, member of the Parking Garage Council, said the parking garage will probably be in the parking lots south of the K-State Student Union. It is scheduled to be built in 2006.

"I think it's always advantageous of having student leadership being supportive of any working project," Conner said.

The parking problem will not be remedied completely, however, with this one parking garage.

"One parking garage is definitely a step in the right direction, but it's not a complete solution," she said.

Ankrom said there may be a student activities center built, which could be attached to the garage.

The center probably will be put to a vote for the entire student body as a referendum later this semester, he said.

"It would be kind of a central location for all students on campus and all organizations," Ankrom said.

Teacher evaluations are also a topic with some candidates requesting online evaluations.

TO THE POINT

Press should avoid convicting BTK suspect

When a story as long-developing and highly intense as the arrest of the suspected BTK serial killer occurs, members of the news media often rush to judgment and present speculation as fact, fanning the flames of anger and passing verdict that hasn't been handed down.

With news as highly contentious as the capture of a suspect in the BTK case, journalistic outlets should exercise restraint and caution.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Law enforcement officials have already closed the case, but Dennis Rader of Park City, Kan., has not yet been charged with the eight murders tied to BTK or the additional two murders now linked to him. Rumors and additional information from anonymous sources continue to mount, some holding Rader responsible for up to 13 murders.

At this point, facts remain sketchy, and despite the unforgivable brutality of the murders committed, Rader is innocent until proven guilty. Without a confession or a conviction, Rader and BTK are not interchangeable names. Until he has been given a fair trial by a jury of his peers, the press should restrain from any demonization of Rader.

The capture of Dennis Rader is undoubtedly a relief to the city of Wichita, yet he remains only a suspect at this point.

He is afforded full access to our justice system. The press should afford him equal access to that system and let a jury decide Rader's innocence or guilt.

Age of matrimony

Marriage can be rewarding, successful for younger couples

JULIA STOSKOPF

Students are busy with studying for classes. Some, myself included, have multiple jobs. Add campus activities and an attempt to have a good time, and all that equals a crazy, busy atmosphere that leaves everyone stressed out.

So, with everything going on, who has time for a date or a boyfriend? And – add heavy sarcasm and irony to this next sentence – who the heck has time to plan a wedding or be married?

As one of those crazy students who are attempting to do it all – including planning a wedding and attending marriage counseling with my equally–insane–but–lovable fiancé, I can only imagine the stress I will have after my wedding in August.

But the choice is yours: students over the age of 18 are legal Americans. Even if some aren't even old enough to drink at their own weddings, they've got the option to take the plunge off the deep end.

Despite my support for early marriages, there are important things to consider before saying "I do."

Some students don't really care what their parents think of their actions, but family should be an extremely important factor in any marriage or wedding, especially in marriages between college students. Young couples need familial support. Estrangement from parents and from their love, support and occasional willingness to back financial ventures can doom a marriage.

Talk to parents. Let them know what is going on. They want the best, even if their actions or words don't always portray it.

Face it - if it can work for Gaylord Focker, it can work for anyone.

But it is impossible to have a happy, functioning marriage without some responsibility.

Fiscal independence from student loans shouldn't be a prerequisite, but couples should be able to afford all the necessary bills without asking for more money every week from Mom and Dad.

While money is almost always tight and is a major ingredient of fights between couples, it can be managed. It may have such a simple solution as not going to the bars on Thursday nights or watching a classic on TV rather than renting from Blockbuster.

Additionally, some couples who met and were married within a few months have fantastic marriages, couples should first have knowledge of each other.

Couples must be honest and trust each other, and that can only come from intimate discussions and a lot of time. If a couple is willing to spend the rest of their lives together, they can take some time first to get to know one another.

Overall, marriages between college students can be successful. Even with all that goes with college life, why can't a healthy, successful relationship be added to the mix?

Marriage during college adds to stress. That classifies as a "duh" on the Captain Obvious scale. But if all other types of stress are manageable, this form of stress is too.

Marriage is a partnership. If a person was considering entering a business, that person would more than likely investigate all the possible pros and cons as well as the business itself over a period of time. All this would occur before the action occurred.

The same should be true of college students wanting to enter marriage.

They should know what they are getting into and decide if, at that time, it is appropriate and worth the stress.

Married couples may fight before and after the wedding due to that stress, but college students are perfectly capable of successfully managing a marriage at a young age, giving the happy couple even more time together.

Delusions, Hollywood's version of love behind young marriages

JONAS HOGG

Being 25 on a college campus, one can't help but feel slightly fuddy-duddyish at times. Passing by students anxiously awaiting that vaunted 21st birthday (only one more year away for some) makes me "feel my age," as it were.

Nonetheless, as much of a relic as I am, there is still at least one thing that I am not quite ready to consign myself to: marriage.

This isn't the 1800s anymore. There is really no good reason to get married so early. By the time we reach old age, the average life expectancy will probably be in the 80s. This means that if you wait until your mid-30s to get married, you'll probably have about 50 years to spend with your "one true love."

Now, the idea of spending 50 more years with myself is depressing. Making someone else live through 50 years with me would be tantamount to human rights violations worthy of a big statue of me with the words "never again" inscribed at the bottom.

Assuming that I am right about marriage – and I am – I can only conclude that people getting married so young must be caused by accident or by delusion. Allow me to elaborate.

By now, most of us more than likely know people who have had an "oops" marriage. As in, "Oops, I'm pregnant."

When a girl tells a guy, "Oops, I'm pregnant," there is a high probability that what you are hearing is a coded message that translates to,
"I have an entire family full of burly men who would hunt down and inflict unspeakable cruelty upon anyone who dared sully my honor."

I have never understood how the problem of having a child is simplified by adding the problems of being married.

It seems to me that an unplanned child and rushed marriage would be more of a "double-oops," but I guess I'm just pragmatic.

The other possibility is the oft-quoted, "We're in love." Yeah, whatever. Now, before all the poets out there start mailing me anthrax, allow me to clarify.

I do believe in the concept of love. I do not believe in the Hollywood version of what love is. You may think that you are madly intertwined, but go take a cold shower before making any lifelong commitments.

Likely, that feeling you have is less a sensation of love and more a sensation of "bulges in all the right places."

Before you go setting off with the one that you've devoted all of last week to, there is something you should know.

Marriage isn't easy.

Just remember, thousands of lawyers around the country are banking on your marriage being an abysmal failure. Not simply a "let's go our own way" sort of failure, but more of an "I hate you and everything you stand for; I'm going to take everything you own, keep you from seeing your children and find some sort of legal loophole that requires you to live in a house made out of poo" sort of failure.

Many marriages that end in a steaming pile of brown started out "rosy through the eyes of love."

So before saying the big "I do," stop and actually think about what you're doing. This country doesn't need any help bolstering its divorce numbers.

If you look back in 30 years and think about all the stuff you wanted to do but couldn't because you got married at the ripe-old age of 21, just remember that awesome guy who worked for the Collegian.

I've tried to warn you.

City Commission primary

By Scott Seel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The City Commission primary race is Tuesday. Voting begins at 8 a.m. and lasts until 5 p.m. at polling locations.

MARK HATESOHL INCUMBENT

Most important issue facing Manhattan today: The biggest thing right now is how the city responds to the increasing number of troops coming to Fort Riley.

If you could accomplish one thing in your term, what would it be: I want to try to develop a lot more better-paying jobs, something that can keep K-State graduates in Manhattan somehow at a competitive wage.

Why should K-State students vote for you: The main reason is the students are also considered residents of Manhattan, and the students end up paying property taxes through their rent, so it should be important to them that somebody like myself is trying to help keep property taxes down to help keep their rent from being any worse than what it is.

BRAD MCCUNE

Most important issue facing Manhattan today: The most important issue today is probably gearing up for the increased arrival of troops from Fort Riley, and that runs right in there real close with the downtown redevelopment.

If you could accomplish one thing in your term, what would it be: Establish strong partnerships with K-State, USD 383 and Fort Riley to bring about a strong collaborative effort to accommodate the influx of new soldiers and all new people coming in, and really, that spans across to economic development.

Why should K-State students vote for you: A vote for Brad McCune will essentially enhance the quality of life in the community and continue Manhattan's quest towards an excellent quality of life.

JAYME MORRIS-HARDEMAN

Most important issue facing Manhattan today: Maintaining safe and stable neighborhoods.

If you could accomplish one thing in your term, what would it be: Improve the quality of life, focusing on neighborhood issues and schools issues, and that ties into economic development as well. We want to grow Manhattan, but we want it to grow in a smart way.

Why should K-State students vote for you: I care about student issues, I live in a neighborhood close to campus, I work on campus and I advise a sorority, so I really do care about student issues. I think that there are a number of areas where I could be supportive of students.

TOM PHILLIPS

Most important issue facing Manhattan today: Redevelopment of downtown; I'd say right now at this point that's number one.

If you could accomplish one thing in your term, what would it be: The successful redevelopment of downtown and the Third and Fourth Street corridors.

Why should K-State students vote for you: I recognize the importance of K-State to our community and what it brings to our local economy and to the quality of life in terms of adding cultural and recreational and academic credibility to our community.

SAM ROBINSON

Most important issue facing Manhattan today: To try to find and provide affordable housing, both as far as purchasing homes and as far as renting homes.

If you could accomplish one thing in your term, what would it be: I'd just like to know that I maintained the quality of life and know that I did my part to keep Manhattan a great place to live and to keep taxes down.

Why should K-State students vote for you: I think that I'm familiar with some of the issues that students face here; I'm going to K-State right now working on my master's degree, so I talk to students and hear what's on their mind.

MATTHEW SCHINDLER

Most important issue facing Manhattan today: Reducing our debt and keeping down taxes.

If you could accomplish one thing in your term, what would it be: Stabilize our tax structure, so we're more appealing to companies wanting to relocate to Manhattan.

Why should K-State students vote for you: Because I like the students, I think they're a vital part of Manhattan, but the reason I've stayed in Manhattan is because I like living in a college town, and I like the enthusiasm they bring to the city.

JIM SHEROW

Most important issue facing Manhattan today: There's a couple of them that are kind of joined together, one is the housing issue, affordable housing quality neighborhoods; that's a very important issue, and then economic development is one that is inter-woven with the housing issue.

If you could accomplish one thing in your term, what would it be: I think in terms of quality economic development; that includes a vibrant downtown, quality shopping centers throughout the city, the acquisition of quality business and also affordable housing which generates a better property tax base and reinvigorates our public schools. What I'd really like to be able to do is find a community consensus on these issues.

Why should K-State students vote for you: I think when you look at particularly housing issues, I mean how many students live in rentals, this is a very important issue for students. I think public transportation is a very important issue. Putting into effect policies that will bring about better quality housing in terms of rentals, safer rentals for students and any other renter in town.

VINCENT TRACEY

Most important issue facing Manhattan today: Being able to do the downtown redevelopment so that the children of the people today aren't paying for it when they retire.

If you could accomplish one thing in your term, what would it be: Make sure that we can get enough housing, so that we can reduce the amount of road traffic, a lot easier to provide housing close to campus so you can walk.

Why should K-State students vote for you: I'm not a diehard fan of the administration of the college, but I don't think the college is really doing enough for the students. Not interacting well with the city to be able to come up with joint projects that would benefit the students and as a by product, the City of Manhattan.

AIDS March promotes awareness

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

WASHINGTON D.C. – Jugglers, artists and dancers surrounded over a thousand youth from around the globe at the Student March Against AIDS in Washington, D.C., this Saturday.

The event marked the first Youth AIDS day, pushing for legislators and the president to focus on a more powerful agenda that is affecting today's youth.

In 2003, 10 million young people aged 15-24 were infected with HIV, which accounted for 50 percent of global HIV infections. More than 14 million children have been orphaned by AIDS.

About 42 million people are infected with HIV/AIDS, with 15,000 becoming infected and with 8,200 dying every day.

Currently, President Bush is planning his domestic agenda, and these activists wanted to make a final impression before Bush finalizes his plans.

Bernice Reagan Johnson was among the many highlighted speakers at the event. Reagan Johnson, civil rights pioneer and music founder of Sweet Honey, spoke of her experiences as a youth activist.

"I am several generations from you today, but the issues are still the same," she said. "The ability to change the world is heavily influenced by something that will wipe youth out: AIDS."

Dwayne Brown, Washington AIDS activist said, "Even in Washington, people don't know the impact HIV has on us. This generation is getting into a future that isn't too sure."

As students chanted, held signs high and marched from Capitol Hill to the White House, they hoped to change the current policies with HIV/AIDS today.

Eric Sawyer, co-founder of Act Up New York and HIV-positive activist, said the representation of students present at the march helped those infected with the virus.

"AIDS should not be a death sentence," he said. "We need access to lifesaving drugs, and by being here, it helps."

Adam Tanner, Washington AIDS activist, said there are many areas in which to improve HIV-education. "HIV is a moral issue," Tanner said. "Not knowing how to use a condom is immoral. Not having HIV-related information is immoral. Abstinence-only education is immoral."

"Nearly 95 percent of HIV-infected individuals are never treated with proper medication," Sawyer said. "We have to go demand that the government pumps money in the fight against AIDS."

Tanner said, "President Bush is only playing lip service with this disease. We have to treat people and fund the fight as the president plans his budget for the next fiscal year."

KSU logo no longer allowed in elections

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Using the Powercat logo for student candidate campaigns will be excused this year, but must be approved in the future.

The use of K-State logos are to be approved through K-State, John Fairman, director of licensing, said. He said local, state and national candidates are not allowed to use K-State logos for their campaigns.

"Normally our name and logos are used in a manner that would assume the person supports Kansas State University or the Cats and not vice versa," Fairman said.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said campaigns have used logos for years.

"We were a little confused, and the candidates were a little confused," he said. "We are changing the regulations next year."

However, McCandless said rules were not broken this year.

"The students went through the appropriate licensing process this year, and that won't be revoked," he said. "We decided it was probably too late to change the rules this year."

Fairman said companies have to pay a royalty each time the Powercat is used. He said he didn't realize candidates were using the logo until seeing it on a sign.

"We're just going to say let's let this year be this year, and next year that's not going to happen," Fairman said.

Democrat Howard Dean visits Kansas to address social issues

By Matthew Schlobohm
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Of all the screaming that was going on Friday at Liberty Hall in Lawrence, this time none came from Howard Dean.

In his place, the deafening shouts came from the audience of more than 1,000 who came to hear Gov. Howard Dean, newly-elected chair of the Democratic National Committee, address issues ranging from social security reform to national defense to the No Child Left Behind Act during his Red, White and Blue Tour.

K-State student Marcy Hager, senior in public relations, said she came to see Dean because she was interested in what he might have to say.

"I really like his political stances, so I wanted to come here and see him speak and find out what he would change," she said.

Dean criticized the Republican Party for not coming to the aid of rural America – specifically farmers.

"Now the Republican Party comes along, and they don't think that farmers need help," he said.

"I think they do ... farming is a business ... you can't predict it."

Cortney McKay, sophomore in psychology and political science at KU, said it was nice to hear a national political figure addressing the concerns of farmers in the Midwest.

"We're farmers and ranchers, and it's being totally overlooked (farming subsidies), and it seems that no one is recognizing and addressing it," she said. "But the fact that he addressed it was huge for me."

Dean said the Republican Party should not be allowed to handle Americans' money or their children's education.

"In Utah, their legislature recently voted to ignore the ... No Child Left Behind Act because they are bureaucratic standards that make it more difficult to have good schools," he said.

"And they have raised property taxes in Kansas and Vermont because they (NCLB) are unfunded mandates."

Dean also said the Republican Party has tried and failed in attempting to balance the national budget, citing the current national deficit as the highest in the history of the United States.

"You cannot trust the Republican Party with your money," he said.

"The Republican Party has increased our national debt to the largest amount ever, and now the president and the Republicans want to raise it by another 50 percent."

Dean's message of national security was tied in with the current national deficit.

"Forty-three percent of all the money that gets lent to us ... has come from foreign countries: the Saudis, the Chinese, OPEC," he said. "Those countries are, as the president put it, 'strategically competitive.'

"How would you like to have the mortgage on your house held by a strategic competitor?"

Many attendees of the rally were very optimistic about the reality of Howard Dean as their new leader.

"He'll really energize the party, get the grassroots going and get people involved in politics that aren't normally," said McKay.

The debate over social security reform was a concern for the multi-generational event. Dean said President Bush's tax reform plan is too risky for average Americans, and many attendees concurred.

One woman raised a sign that read, "Save social security. Save my grandchildren."

"I was really glad that he talked about social security," said Jacqueline Thomas, sophomore in biology and student at KU. "It affects everyone."

Not everyone in attendance agreed with Dean.

Elisa Shields, Lawrence resident, said Dean is too fiscally-conservative and does not support same-sex marriage as staunchly as she would like.

"In his state, he seemed to lean more to the right than I would," she said.

"I heard him earlier today, and he didn't seem to take a very strong position, and I strongly support gay marriage, so I would like to see him take a more aggressive stance."

Former Saddam adviser apprehended

By Salah Nasrawi
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iraqi officials said Sunday that Syrian authorities had captured Saddam Hussein's half brother and 29 other officials of the deposed dictator's Baath Party in Syria and handed them over to Iraq in an apparent goodwill gesture.

Sabawi Ibrahim al-Hassan, a former Saddam adviser suspected of financing insurgents after U.S. troops ousted Saddam, was captured in Hasakah in northeastern Syria near the Iraqi border, two senior Iraqi officials told The Associated Press by telephone on condition of anonymity. Hasakah is about 30 miles from the Iraqi border.

They added that al-Hassan was captured and handed over to Iraqi authorities along with 29 other members of Saddam's collapsed Baath Party, whose Syrian branch has been in power in Damascus since 1963.

Officials in interim Prime Minister Ayad Allawi's office, speaking on condition of anonymity, confirmed al-Hassan's capture but gave no further details.

In Baghdad, U.S. military officials had no immediate comment.

The Iraqi officials did not specify when al-Hassan was captured, only saying he was detained following the Feb. 14 assassination of former Lebanese Prime Minister Rafik Hariri in a blast in Beirut, Lebanon, that killed 16 others.

Syria has come under intense scrutiny following Hariri's death, with many in Lebanon blaming Damascus and Beirut's pro-Syrian government for the killing. The United States and France also have called on Damascus to withdraw 15,000 Syrian troops from Lebanon.

Washington has long accused Syria of harboring and aiding former members of Saddam's toppled Baathist regime suspected of involvement in the deadly insurgency against U.S.-led forces in Iraq.

"The capture appeared to be a goodwill gesture by the Syrians to show that they are cooperating," one Iraqi official told the AP.

A third Iraqi official, also speaking on condition of anonymity, said Syrian security forces expelled al-Hassan from Syria into Iraq.

Iran, Russia sign fuel agreement; U.S. objects

By Ali Akbar Dareini
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iran and Russia ignored U.S. objections and signed a nuclear fuel agreement Sunday that is key to bringing Tehran's first reactor online by mid-2006.

The long-delayed deal, signed at the heavily guarded Bushehr nuclear facility in southern Iran, dramatized President Bush's failure to persuade the Russians to curtail support for the Iranian nuclear program during his summit with Vladimir Putin on Thursday in Slovakia.

Under the deal, Russia will provide nuclear fuel to Iran and then take back the spent fuel, a step meant as a safeguard to ensure it cannot be diverted into a weapons program. Iran has also agreed to allow the U.N. nuclear watchdog agency, the International Atomic Energy Agency, to monitor Bushehr and the fuel deliveries.

Iranian Vice President Gholamreza Aghazadeh and Russian Federal Atomic Energy Agency chief Alexander Rumyantsev signed the agreement. The signing, which was delayed a day, came after the two senior officials toured the $800-million complex.

"Today, a very important development occurred, and that was the protocol on returning nuclear fuel, which we signed together. In the next few weeks, many Russian technicians will arrive in Bushehr" to finish the plant, Rumyantsev said.

Volunteer medical services at rodeo provide treatment, friendship

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A line of rodeo contestants wait outside the Kansas Orthopedic Center's trailer, parked just north of Weber Arena at the Kansas State Rodeo Saturday at 7:30 a.m. They are waiting patiently for free treatment for minor injuries, medical advice or maybe just a cup of coffee.

Long before the rodeo starts, Robin Rivers, a licensed athletic trainer and the primary trainer at the rodeo, is hard at work taping ankles, elbows, knees and wrists and dispensing her invaluable knowledge and bottomless pot of coffee to anyone who asks, and even a few who don't.

Rivers works with the Kansas Orthopedic Center in Wichita during the week, but on the weekend, she travels as far as Texas to provide her services at no cost.

Rivers is able to provide this service for free because of the generosity of her supervisor, Chris Miller. Miller is a doctor with the Kansas Orthopedic Center and organized the rodeo sports medicine group in 1996 after he recognized the need for a group dedicated to rodeo sports medicine.

"Rodeo is one area that is very much under-served," Miller said.

Though the service is affiliated with the Orthopedic Center, virtually all funding comes through Miller, who pays for everything from travel expenses to athletic tape to Tylenol and allows the service to be offered completely free of charge.

"It's my pocket book," Miller said. "This wallet right back here provides it all."

Miller, or "Doc," as he is known by virtually everyone at the rodeo, supervises Rivers and helps out as much as possible. However, this weekend Miller has appointments to keep in Wichita and must leave early in the morning – but not before having a cup or two of coffee.

Assisting Rivers and "Doc" Miller is Ashley Ellis, a senior in the athletic training program at the University of Kansas, helping out as much as she can in her free time. Ellis started working with the group last summer when she received an internship and continues to volunteer whenever her schedule permits.

After Miller goes to Wichita, Rivers is in charge, assuming an almost motherly role as she takes care of her friends and patients.

"We work long hours from early in the morning to late at night; we're here all day. That's just the nature of the job."

Robin Rivers
ATHLETIC TRAINER

There is an understanding and respect between Rivers and the rodeo participants, but also a sense of camaraderie and trust.

"If they need help, they'll ask for it, and they'll be there to help you," Rivers said.

Both Ellis and Rivers have worked with other collegiate athletes and say there are countless differences. When Rivers worked with sports medicine programs in colleges, she had total control over the treatment of players' injuries. Now, she can only offer suggestions and provide treatment when someone asks.

Rivers and Ellis both prefer working with collegiate rodeo participants because they said contestants know their bodies better and understand the difference between pain and injury.

"They're used to mom and dad saying, 'Just get up, rub some dirt on it,'" Rivers said.

"They are the greatest to work with," Ellis said. "They're the most appreciative, they are, in part because of programs like this, the most educated about their bodies and they take the most responsibility for themselves. Really, there are no other athletes I would rather work with."

After the morning rush comes through, Rivers and Ellis head into Weber for the afternoon show, ready for anything. They are there to provide a service, so they will only get involved if they are asked or if they feel it is absolutely necessary. However, if Rivers ever feels she can't handle the situation for whatever reason, she is always willing to turn things over to the Emergency Medical Service, which always stands by with the ambulance running.

"It's when I feel there is a need for emergency care and assistance or when maybe there's not a good rapport and I can call the EMS in," said Rivers.

However, Rivers always must tread a thin line. The lives and well beings of the individual are her number-one priority, but she must also worry about keeping their trust.

"If I constantly called EMS in, where's the credibility?" Rivers said.

As Rivers watches the events from the sidelines, it is easy to see how family-like the rodeo really is. Many cowboys greet Rivers, and Rivers calls almost all of them by name. It is apparent that her credibility among the participants is good. With every passing face, a new conversation begins, and mutual memories are relived.

"You wouldn't last long here if there wasn't trust," Rivers said.

After the matinee, Rivers and Ellis head back to the trailer to treat any new injuries. Even though several cowboys limped away from the arena, appearing to be hurt, only a few of them consider the injury serious enough to concern Rivers.

After everyone is treated and gone, Rivers and Ellis have only a few moments to themselves. Then they will have to start again, preparing themselves and participants for the evening events.

Just like every event of the rodeo, Rivers and Ellis stand to the side, making sure they don't get in anyone's way but letting their presence be known.

Throughout the evening, Rivers talks with participants who appear to be in pain, offering any help that she can provide. She has to rush off when a bull rider is injured, and she takes him aside to prepare him for transport to the hospital, fearing he may have ruptured his spleen.

When she finally returns to the trailer, long after the last event, she finds it packed with injured and expecting athletes. As she moves from one patient to another, treating concussions, abrasions, sprains, aching ribs and even a cut eye, a group of concerned teammates begins to form outside the trailer.

One by one, contestants leave, until finally, at 12:30 a.m., the last patient leaves.

"We work long hours from early in the morning to late at night; we're here all day," Rivers said. "That's just the nature of the job."

Father, son keep family tradition alive

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Doug Munsell Jr. and his son, Wacey, played catch with a Nerf football Saturday night.

The rodeo clown team was interrupted after a one-ton bull named Slobber Knocker charged Wacey Munsell.

The Munsell family has bullfighting and rodeo in its veins. Wacey Munsell is a third-generation bull fighter.

Doug Munsell began bullfighting by accident in 1978, when he was a junior in high school. He was entered in the high school rodeo as a bareback rider, but the bullfighter who had been hired never arrived. An older bullfighter who had worked with Doug Munsell's father asked the inexperienced Doug Munsell to take the no-show's place.

"I didn't know a thing about it at the time," Doug Munsell said. "All he told me to do was to run in circles."

Doug Munsell failed to avoid the very first bull he fought, taking too large of a circle and learning a very important lesson on the mechanics of a bull's movement.

"My career was born," said Doug Munsell. "I was hooked in more ways then one."

Doug Munsell was involved in rodeos throughout his college career, later participating in professional rodeos. In 1998, he went to fighting bulls again, but had to quit in 2001 because of health concerns after nearly 30 years of participation in every level of rodeo.

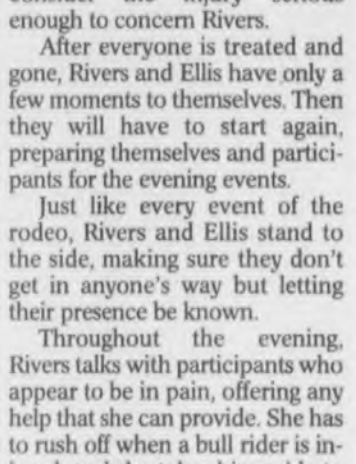
"I was pushing 40, so I kind of stepped into the barrel man position," Doug Munsell said.

At about this time, Doug Munsell's then-14-year-old son Wacey Munsell began to fight his first bulls. Wacey Munsell got an early start by riding bulls at the age of 11, but he was too small to fight them at this time. At age 14, Wacey Munsell was given the opportunity to attend a bull-fighting school at only five feet tall and 80 pounds.

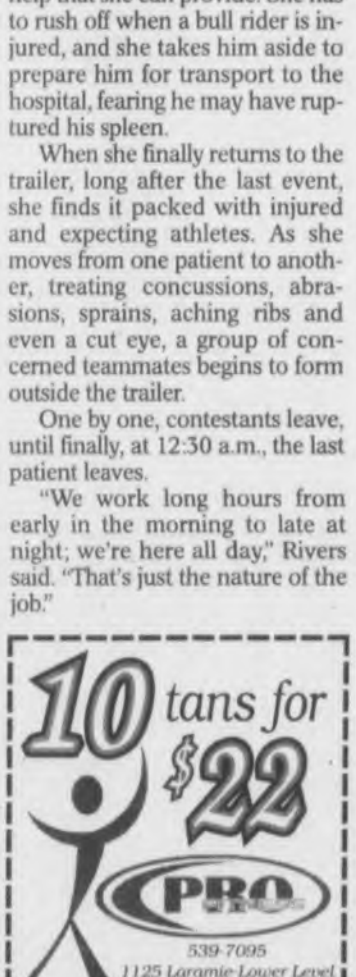
Wacey Munsell said he had a blast at the camp, and soon began fighting bulls in junior rodeos. After several years, he moved on to the college level, and in October, he participated in his first professional rodeos.

Wacey Munsell became the youngest person ever invited to attend the professional bull fighter's tour. Then, eight days after his 18th birthday, Wacey Munsell became the world champion bullfighter.

"They always say he's following in his dad's footsteps, but when his dad was 17, he was just working his first deal, and when Wacey was barely 18, he had his first world championship buckle," Doug Munsell said.



A lot has changed in bullfighting since Doug Munsell started nearly three decades ago. When Doug fought his first bull, he did it without any protection. Now Wacey wears a protective vest which guards his chest, back and ribs from injury.



Also, the look of the sport is changing. For years, rodeo clowns and bullfighters donned the classic baggy pants, oversized shirts and painted face. However, in recent years, professional bullfighters have started to surrender these traditions in favor of more modern looking jerseys, making bullfighting look more like a typical sport.

Wildcat men place 5th, women 3rd

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LINCOLN, Neb. – K-State's track and field team proved once again why it is one of the best teams in the Big 12.

The Wildcat men finished third (80.5 points) and the women's team placed fifth (66.5 points) at the Big 12 Indoor Championships Friday and Saturday in Lincoln, Neb.

Head coach Cliff Rovelto said he was pleased with both his teams' performances because the athletes gave their best efforts.

"I think we really did a good job of competing in the meet on both sides," Rovelto said. "I really felt the best we could do was fourth for both teams. The thing that has made this program special over the last few years is that we do as well as we're capable of doing."

K-State captured four event titles over the weekend, which included a second consecutive conference-championship performance by junior Christian Smith in the 1,000-meter run (two minutes, 24.32 seconds).

Smith, the only Wildcat to successfully defend his title, said he put himself in good position to win heading into the final lap.

"I felt really good, and I was ready for a big last lap," Smith said. "I knew if I was in the right position I could hold off anybody, and that is the way it turned out."

As Smith crossed the finish line, he turned and saw his teammate, senior Erik Sproll, right behind him.

The other Wildcat men's title belongs to junior Coby Cost in the weight throw (70-01). Cost, a native of El Dorado, Kan., said he was happy to win and remain undefeated on the season.

"It feels good," Cost said. "I had a lot of pressure on me since I've been so good, and I hadn't won (a conference title) yet, so it felt like I had a weight lifted off my back. I was a little nervous, but I treated (the Big 12 Indoor Championships) as just another meet with a different name."

Freshman Morgan Bonds captured one of two event titles for the Wildcat women, winning the 600-yard run in a career-best time of one minute, 21.67 seconds.

Bonds, from Hutchinson, Kan., said her accomplishment exceeded her first-season expectations.

"I thought maybe I'd be in the finals of the 600, but I never thought I'd have a chance to win," Bonds said.

Senior jumper and team captain Chaytan Hill was the fourth Wildcat to win an event, as she won the triple jump with a leap of 44-02.

Hill, from Kirby, Texas, is among the nation's leaders in the triple jump this season.

Coach Rovelto said he believed the Wildcat women would have placed as high as third if two of his best athletes were healthy – sophomore thrower Jenny Glodowski and sophomore sprinter Shunte Thomas.

"You put those kids in the meet and that makes a huge difference," Rovelto said. "You don't want to make excuses, but that is just a fact."

Nebraska swept both team titles for the second-straight year in impressive fashion, as each team scored more than 130 points.

K-State has one more meet before national competition as it competes in the Iowa State Last Chance next weekend in Ames, Iowa.

Wildcats advance in Big 12 standings

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It came down to the last shot, but the K-State Wildcats held on and defeated the Colorado Buffaloes 84-82 in Boulder, Colo., Saturday.

After two missed free-throw shots by K-State sophomore guard Lance Harris with 9.1 seconds left to play, Colorado's Marcus Hall sprinted down the floor with a chance to send the game to overtime, but he was unable to connect, as senior forward Jeremiah Massey grabbed the rebound to seal the Wildcats' second-straight win.

The Wildcats (15-10, 5-9) led by as many as 16 in the second half, after leading 39-29 at the break, but the Buffaloes (13-13, 4-10) cut the lead to just two after a 22-8 run in the final five minutes of the game.

Massey led the Wildcats in scoring with 28 points on 10-of-13 shooting and pulled in a career-high 19 rebounds for his first double-double since Jan. 26 against Iowa State.

The 6-foot-7 senior was also 8-of-10 from the free-throw line and has shot 80 percent (20-of-25) from the floor in his last two games.

Despite the two missed free throws at the end of the game, Harris scored a career-high 20 points on 8-of-11 shooting and was 3-of-5 from beyond the three-point line in 31 minutes.

Colorado was led by freshman guard Richard Roby and junior guard Jayson Obazuaye, who combined for 45 points against the Wildcats.

Roby led the second half Buffalo charge, with 22 of his 30 points in the second half. The 6-foot-6 freshman was 10-of-19 from the floor and was 7-of-11 from behind the arc. Roby's 30 points and seven 3-pointers both marked career highs.

Obazuaye scored 15 points on 7-of-10 shooting and was 1-of-3 from the free-throw line.

The win moves K-State ahead of the Buffaloes in the Big 12 standings into 10th place with two games left to play.

Wecker becomes 2nd woman to have jersey retired

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was a fitting end to the career of Kendra Wecker in Saturday night's 73-46 win over Kansas in front of a nearly sold-out arena and a section from her hometown of Marysville, Kan., in attendance.

Laurie Koehn knocked down her fifth 3-pointer of the game and No. 373 of her career, and the last field goal for the senior class at Bramlage Coliseum came from Wecker.

Claire Coggins' missed three-point shot came off the rim, and with 30 seconds remaining, Wecker grabbed the offensive rebound and went back up for her game-high 21st point.

"Having Laurie Koehn get one last three after coming into the game and then having Kendra finish with a put-back rebound was just apropos," Coach Deb Patterson said. "That's what they brought, and it was really wonderful to see that game end with that Kendra Wecker basket."

Wecker recorded her 49th career double-double and passed Nicole Ohlde for most field goals made in a career with her fourth basket of the game coming on a transition lay-up after a steal by Coggins.

Wecker holds three K-State records and is 39 points shy from passing all-time scoring leader Ohlde and 51 field goal attempts away from passing Eileen Feeney's 25-year-old career record of 1,868 attempts.

Coming out of the tunnel for the last time at Bramlage Coliseum, Wecker, with red eyes, went through warm-ups, and then promptly went out and scored the Wildcats' first six points of the game and knocked down her first six shots.

"Running out on the floor was pretty special," Wecker said. "I don't remember most of warm-ups because I was just in a daze, cherishing everything. It's been awesome. It's been very special, and tonight, I think, was just a great ending to everything."

After the game, Wecker became the second player in K-State women's basketball history – and fifth overall – to have her jersey retired.

Koehn said the opportunity to play with Wecker in college was something she never thought would happen, even when they played on the same AAU team.

"It's something I would never have imagined that I would be able to do, back when we were fifth- or sixth-graders playing AAU ball together," Koehn said. "She's just an incredible player that makes everyone on the floor that much better."

The win was the senior class's 100th overall, and they finished their careers without losing to rival Kansas.

Senior Laurie Koehn waves to fans as she makes her way off the court for the last time at Bramlage Coliseum Saturday night. Koehn scored 19 points to lead the Cats to a 73-46 win over the University of Kansas.

No. 17 Wildcats defeat rival Jayhawks 73-46

Saturday night, senior forward Kendra Wecker's jersey was retired, making her just the second K-State women's basketball player ever to receive such an honor.

Not only was the retirement a highlight not soon to be forgotten, K-State played a winning basketball game as well.

The No. 17-ranked Wildcats easily dispatched rival Kansas 73-46, giving the current senior class of Chelsea Domenico, Laurie Koehn, Brie Madden, Megan Mahoney and Wecker a perfect 8-0 record against the Jayhawks in their four years.

"It means a lot, definitely to us Kansas kids, because we still appreciate it and realize just how intense that rivalry is and always has been," Koehn said. "Growing up, going to school and seeing your classmates that were K-State or KU fans opposite of you, and the dog-fights you'd get in with them, you understand how important that is to Kansans.

"It's a great accomplishment and something I'm real proud of to be able to say, that we went undefeated against them."

Wecker gave K-State (20-6, 11-4) reason to celebrate early, as she hit two-straight 3-pointers to open the game, on her way to game-highs of 21 points, 14 rebounds and her 49th career double-double.

"For Laurie to hit two threes back-to-back, that's nothing, but for a player like me, I was like 'Wow, OK.'" Wecker said of her start. "I was feeling good, I had some rhythm."

The rest of the senior Wildcats helped to quickly bury Kansas (12-14, 5-10) and any hopes the Jayhawks had of an upset in K-State's last home game, as K-State raced out to a 26-5 lead to start the game.

Koehn, who finished with 19 points, hit two 3-pointers, Mahoney added a lay-up, Madden chipped in four points and Domenico dished out four assists to build a lead that would never go below 15 points the rest of the game.

"Our players took the floor with a real energy about them," head coach Deb Patterson said. "The senior class was excited about this crowd, about the opportunity to play a quality game. Their basketball decisions were real good."

"I think we definitely wanted to come out aggressive," Mahoney said. "I think we hit some big shots early and made a run to start the game, and we went from there."

Aquanita Burras was the lone Jayhawk to finish with double-figure points, scoring 11 points. The Wildcats used smothering defense to contain Kansas' leading scorer Crystal Kemp to just eight points. Kemp had been averaging 13.7 points per game.

"I was very pleased with our interior defense," Patterson said. "We went in at the half, and (Kemp) was 0-for-6. We never really let her get a lot of one-on-one isolations. I thought, as a team, we defended with a real awareness of where she was, because we have a great deal of respect for her."

NFL | Bettis agrees to return to Pittsburgh, takes pay cut

Bettis

Jerome Bettis, who weighed retiring after the Steelers lost in the AFC championship game last month, agreed Saturday to another pay cut and will play for at least one more season.

This is the second consecutive season the NFL's No.-5 career rusher has accepted a substantial pay cut to stay in Pittsburgh. Bettis was to have made $4,484,000 next season, but will play for about $1.5 million — about $500,000 more than his base salary last season.

Last year, Bettis agreed to cut his salary by $2.7 million to remain in Pittsburgh as a backup. Bettis made the Pro Bowl for the sixth time after rushing for 941 yards.

New York Fashion Week unveiled the falls 2005 looks Feb. 4-11. It's the perfect time to uncover the things we've always wanted to know about fashion shows.

WHAT IS FASHION WEEK?

Fashion Week is a bi-annual event that, through fashion designers' innovative – and sometimes outlandish – creations, showcases the underlying trends for the upcoming season. They take place in major fashion capitals of the world, including New York, Milan, Paris, London and Los Angeles.

About 150 designers show their collections over the course of seven days, and each designer shows in only one city. In New York, most of the fashion shows take place in huge tents set up in Bryant Park. However, many designers opt for a more unique setting and may hold theirs in a museum, club or a warehouse.

WHO GETS TO ATTEND FASHION SHOWS?

Fashion shows are exclusive events that have long been overflowing with a glamourous crowd of retail buyers, magazine editors and celebrities galore. However, an increasing amount of financial analysts and investors have shown an interest in previewing the collections in order to get a sneak peak of future sales and possible investments.

Fashion editors attend numerous shows, looking for trends and trying to capture the mood of the season. For example, a mood set for this spring was "carefree bohemian."

HOW ARE THE SHOWS PUT TOGETHER?

The designer hires one or more stylists to help behind the scenes. Keeping the designer's vision in mind, the stylist pairs the outfits together and decides the order in which the clothes will exit on the runway. The stylist is also in charge of directing the hair and makeup, which greatly accentuates the clothes and the overall attitude of the collection.

HOW FAR IN ADVANCE DO THEY DESIGN EACH COLLECTION?

Designers and textile producers strongly rely on color services such as Pantone to start developing the seasonal color trends about two years in advance. Each season's "it" colors will appear not only in fashion, but in other areas such as interior design, cars, electronics and cosmetics. A designer might also hire a trend forecasting firm to research patterns and events in politics, economics, society, technology, recurring fashion cycles and zeitgeist, which means "spirit of the times." The combination of all of these things helps forecasters predict what will be popular in the upcoming year. A designer will start designing a collection about one year in advance.

WHAT ABOUT THE MODELS?

Usually about 30 models walk the runway in each fashion show. Out of these, five may be considered the season's "top girls," who do up to six shows a day. Top models like Gisele Bündchen and Karolina Kurkova can earn up to $20,000 per show. A common misconception is that all models suffer from severe eating disorders; however, most of them are naturally thin, and many even claim that due to their figure, they felt ugly or odd growing up.

TRENDS TO LOOK FOR

Last week, four K-State apparel and textile professors accompanied 30 apparel marketing and design students to Las Vegas for the annual WWD Magic Apparel Trade Show. While there, they were able to experience a fashion show firsthand that featured clothing from a variety of designers' lines. Here are the trends that were notable all over the runways.

WOMEN

- The color palette is a mix of earth and jewel tones – lots of deep blues and rich browns, black, charcoal, ivory, gold, pumpkin orange, camel and crimson red and shades of purple, yellow and green
- Mixing masculine and feminine – pairings such as a herringbone fluted skirt with a printed chiffon blouse
- Noticeable coats – especially belted trenchcoats, ladylike three-quarter coats, structured and printed blazers and cropped jackets
- Fur will be back and bigger than before, appearing on coats and accessories
- Luxe fabrics like tapestry, brocade, lamé, satin and velvet are equally appealing for evening or to sneak into a daytime look
- Lots of classic menswear fabrics and colors done in soft, feminine shapes
- Silhouettes will be wearable and sleek, with the exception of loose pants Skirts will be fuller and longer in general

MEN

- The main focus is on coats. There are lots of new materials, colors and lengths to try, such as fur and shearling, leather, wool, velvet blazers, double-breasted three-quarter length and ski parkas.
- Unique jacket and pant combinations in fall's jewel-toned palette, such as plaid, graphic-print blazers over T-shirts and jeans or colorful corduroys
- Overall, out with the sloppy way of dressing and on to a cleaner, sleeker look
- Latest styles of denim are painted, distressed and washed
- Edgy, black-and-white outfits with a dash of color such as green, purple or orange
- Turtlenecks, sweaters and cardigans with jeans

What starts as a designer's brilliant idea sketched out on a piece of paper sets some of the major fashion trends for the season and eventually trickles down and inspires the clothes that each of us buy and wear.

LCD Soundsystem exceeds expectations for debut album

"LCD Soundsystem"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

James Murphy is a self-proclaimed "total dork," with musical influences and knowledge from almost every great band in history. Murphy is, along with Tim Goldsworthy, one half of the hip and influential disco-punk label DFA. Formed in 2001, DFA (Death From Above) has produced tracks by The Rapture, The Black Dice, UNKLE and even a collaboration with Britney Spears that will most likely never see the light of day.

The latest from DFA is the double-disc debut of Murphy's pet project, LCD Soundsystem. The first disc is LCD Soundsystem's proper debut, filled with nine completely new tracks. The second disc compiles all LCD Soundsystem's groundbreaking singles up to this point.

The first disc begins with "Daft Punk is Playing at my House." The song takes an AC/DC-like guitar lick and places it over a driving bass line. Murphy sings in his usual deadpan tone with the occasional venture into upper range "ooh-oohs." The best part of the song is when Murphy cries "Solo!" and instead of a killer guitar line, one hears a pounding cow bell backed by joyous hand-claps.

Following this track is the song "Too Much Love," with its powerful and catchy tribal bass line. Murphy sings in a hushed tone about the feeling of doing too many substances at a party. During the entire song, an eerie synth line floats in and out – the sound of a brain burned out and hungover.

Another highlight – on a CD filled with them – is "Movement." The song is a feedback-laden diatribe against most of the current music scene: "It's like a movement without the bother of all the meaning." Murphy's words and voice are dripping with the perfect amount of cynicism and weariness dripping.

"Never as Tired as When I'm Waking Up," is an acid-filled Beatle-esque ballad. In fact, the guitar line owes a lot to "Dear Prudence." Murphy doesn't allow the tempo to stay languid for long. He jumps right back into danceable tracks with "On Repeat" and "Thrills." The latter song sounds like an updated take on the beat of Missy Elliott's "Get Ur Freak On," with pounding bass and fuzzy drones.

"Disco Infiltrator" is a fun and exciting rump-shaking anthem. The final song, "Great Release," brings to mind Brian Eno's serene ambient-rock.

This just covers the excellent first disc. The second disc is the real treat of this set. There is LCD's first single, "Losing My Edge," where Murphy attacks the hipster's pretentious musical tastes while also admitting to being a part of the movement. "Beat Connection" is a high-hat hitting, tambourine shaking, bass-pumping hell of a ride. It is one of LCD Soundsystem's greatest songs.

The second disc also carries two versions of "Yeah," the hit single from last year. This is not an Usher song; no, it is much better than that. "Yeah (Crass Version)" has Murphy and crew singing deadpan tongue-in-cheek verses. The song has so much going on that one has to give it several listens before fully appreciating the song – but that is in no way a chore, because the song is so damn catchy. It ends with a crescendo of acid-house sounds before the bottom falls out and the song explodes.

LCD Soundsystem's debut album is better than I ever hoped it could be, and I was very hyped up about it. Murphy has such an excellent ear for sound and such a wide variety of influences that it is almost a joy to try to spot them all. The even bigger enjoyment, however, is just listening to how Murphy has put all these influences together to create an album that is catchy, danceable and one of the must-own records of 2005.

Engineering program inspires girls' involvement

By Jessica Holland
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eighty middle schoolers from around the state gathered at K-State's Fiedler Hall for Exploring Engineering at K-State on Saturday.

The event, sponsored by Girls Researching Our World, The Women in Engineering and Science Program and the Multicultural Engineering Program, was part of National Engineers Week, which was celebrated Feb. 20–26.

During the week, more than 100 engineering, scientific and educational societies and major corporations dedicate time to improving the public understanding of the engineering profession.

Emphasis is also placed on promoting pre-college interest in math, science and engineering.

The National Science Foundation and Sprint sponsored the program. Several Kansas middle schools attended the event.

Susan Arnold Christian, program outreach coordinator for EEK!, said they targeted middle schoolers because it is a crucial time to do so.

"We know from research that girls lose interest in science and math during the transition years from middle school to high school," Christian said.

Grace Stanfield, a sixth-grader at Woodrow Wilson Elementary School, said her experience in the computer engineering session was good.

"We did PowerPoint presentations about ourselves, and I liked it because I like to work with computers," Stanfield said.

The coordinators had only anticipated having about 50 students attend, but they had enroll.

"We'd have liked it to have been more girls there, but it was about fifty-fifty, so we were pleased," Christian said.

Comedian discusses cultural issues

By Ben Spicer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Everything from lyrics in music albums to race discrepancies was used by comedian Zooman to entertain audience members Friday.

Corey "Zooman" Miller, whose routines have been seen on Black Entertainment Television and who has performed to standing room-only crowds, came to Manhattan courtesy of Zeta Phi Beta sorority as a way to showcase the sorority during Black History Month.

LaFreshia Brown, vice president of the sorority, saw Zooman at Southern Methodist University during a greek leadership conference, and she wanted to bring his act to the school.

"He's more than just a speaker, comedian or poet; there is an important message that he tries to send," Brown said.

Antoinette McElroy, Zeta Phi Beta member, said the sorority was looking to kick off the final womanhood week.

"He's something different, entertaining and should provide some relief from the workload we've all been enduring," she said.

The hour-and-a-half-long performance was highlighted by Zooman parading around the entire room on more than one occasion and using members of the audience in his skit. He also gave his interpretation of recent national anthems, as well as his views on the National Basketball Association and its recent brawl with fans.

Robin Higham, emeritus professor in military history, will talk about his international commission to Morocco during a lecture Tuesday.

The lecture is titled, "On an International Commission to Morocco."

Since 1975, the U.S. Commission of Military History has an annual meeting in Europe to discuss and compare military history over the past years.

"Over the last 30 years, I have attended all but about three meetings," Higham said.

Higham will discuss the views expressed at the last international meeting held in Morocco and answer any questions attendees might have.

Higham taught military history at K-State for 35 years and retired in 1998.

BTK | Wichita police arrest suspect saying Rader had confessed to at least six murders and could be responsible for another three killings. Police spokeswoman Janet Johnson declined to comment on the accuracy of the statements.

The source told the Associated Press police are investigating whether Rader was responsible for the deaths of two Wichita State University students as well as a woman who lived down the street from a known BTK victim. One of the new accusations could qualify Rader for the death penalty, if convicted.

BTK resurfaced last March, two decades after his last murder by sending a letter to the Wichita Eagle containing a photocopy of Vicki Wegerle's driver's license as well as crime scene photos. Wegerle was killed in 1986.

In the last year, BTK has sent messages to news media as well as directly to police. At least three packages contained a victim's jewelry as well as the driver's license of victim Nancy Fox.

At the time, former Wichita Police Chief Richard LaMunyon guessed BTK wanted to be found.

"It is possible something in his life has changed," he said of BTK's messages. "I think he felt the need to get his story out."

And after 31 years of investigation, the era of terror could end.

Kline praised the law enforcement officials, news media and others whose work will free the citizens of Wichita of fear.

"This story, as is all stories of justice if achieved, is a story of our best brought out by the necessity caused by the actions of the worst of mankind," he said. "Our best will prevail."

GLOBAL | GlobalFlyer hopes to set multiple records with historic flight

Chairman and founder of Virgin Atlantic Sir Richard Branson jokes with GlobalFlyer pilot Steve Fossett during a press conference in the mission control room at K-State-Salina. Fossett will take off for his attempt at a world record flight around the world this afternoon in Salina.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

GlobalFlyer also may set other world records during the flight, Richard Branson, founder of Virgin Atlantic, said. These include the record for speed non-stop around the world without refueling, the jet airplane record for flying a closed course more than 12,000 miles and the total distance by a jet airplane more than 12,000 miles.

Fossett currently holds 62 records in five different sports including balloons, sailing, gliders, airships and jet airplanes.

ELECTION | Presidential pair disqualified for violation

When discussing sentencing, Elections Commissioner David McCandless recommended the maximum punishment, which is disqualification from the race.

"The candidate and his campaign have been egregiously disregardful of the rules," he said.

Parker said he should be given a second chance, since this was his first time running in Student Governing Association elections.

He said all the violations were made right.

"I think since we've corrected all of them, we should be given a free pass assuming we pay the fines, which will be done," Parker said.

Due to the disqualification, Parker and Schirer will not have to pay the fines each violation asked for, but if they appeal, McCandless said it would be a good idea.

Parker and Schirer can appeal the decision by 5 p.m. Wednesday, after the primary race. An appeal would be filed with the Attorney General Damian Lair, and the Student Tribunal would review the case.

Parker said he is not sure if they will appeal yet, but said he wasn't pleased with the disqualification.

"I thought it was bogus," he said. "If shenanigans are wrong, then I don't want to be right."

McCandless said if Parker were to appeal after the primary elections, it could cause a revote to happen, but it's up to the Student Tribunal.

"The Student Tribunal would be responsible for listing the specific actions that would occur," he said.

Other candidates are not going to be given different treatment for regulation violations, McCandless said.

"We're going to be considering violations pretty seriously," he said. "No one is going to receive different treatment or lesser treatment."

2 Fort Riley soldiers killed in Iraq by homemade bomb

Moski
FORT RILEY SOLDIER

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two Fort Riley soldiers were killed by an improvised explosive device in Taji, Iraq on Friday, Fort Riley officials said.

Spc. Colby M. Farnan, 22, was a field artilleryman. He joined the Army in August 2002 and has been stationed at Fort Riley since March 2003. Farnan was from Weston, Mo.

Spc. Jason L. Moski, 24, was also a field artilleryman. He joined the Army in August 2002 and has been stationed at Fort Riley since January 2003. Moski was from Blackville, S.C.

Both soldiers were members of Battery B, 4th Battalion, 1st Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade, 1st Armor Division. They were deployed in February 2005.

An improvised explosive device is a homemade bomb that can range in size and severity, said Sam Robinson, assistant media relations officer at Fort Riley.

"Sometimes they bury them in the road," Robinson said. "Some of the smaller ones have been hidden in Coke cans and hidden in building walls."

Robinson said Farnan and Moski were on a dismounted patrol, which means that they were on foot patrolling the area.

Farnan and Moski are the 45th and 46th soldiers from Fort Riley to be killed in Iraq. Fort Riley currently has 4,300 soldiers stationed in Iraq to support Operation Iraqi Freedom, Robinson said.

Robinson said there will be a memorial service on post for Farnan and Moski on Friday.

The deaths are under investigation in Iraq.

SALINA, Kan. – After months of delays, the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer launched at 6:47 p.m. Monday from Salina Municipal Airport.

The flight, piloted by millionaire Steve Fossett, started his expected 66-hour journey to be the first nonstop, solo flight around the world.

"It's going to be a long night, followed by two really long nights," Fossett, 60, said as he stepped into the airplane.

Fossett is not new to records – he was the first person to solo in a balloon.

Mission control director Kevin Stass said Fossett will fly over Chicago, Detroit and Canada before heading across the Atlantic Ocean late Monday night. The route will then take him over Africa, the Middle East, India, China and the Pacific Ocean.

Hundreds of spectators gathered along the 8,000-foot runway despite bitterly cold winds to get a glimpse of the plane, which carried 22,100 pounds of fuel. The

BTK suspect to be charged at noon today

Wichita's BTK serial killer suspect will appear in court at noon today via video to hear prosecutors' criminal charges against him.

Dennis Rader, 59, is being held on a $10 million bond in connection with 10 murders committed between 1974 and 1991. He was arrested Friday based on DNA evidence.

Autumn Bell, a student at Butler in Wichita, lived in Rader's neighborhood in Park City, Kan.

Rader, who worked as a city code enforcer, was also a Cub Scout leader and president of the Christ Lutheran Church. He is married and has two grown children. His daughter is a graduate of K-State.

"He roamed around our neighborhood and tried to take our dog away," Bell said. "He just spent a lot of time driving around our neighborhood."

Bell said she wasn't surprised when she found out about the arrest.

Iraqi suicide bomb
A suicide car bomber blasted a crowd of police Monday as they gathered for physicals outside a medical clinic south of Baghdad, killing at least 115 people and wounding 132 — the single deadliest attack in the two-year insurgency. Torn limbs littered the street outside the clinic in Hillah, a predominantly Shiite area about 60 miles south of Baghdad.

Government resigns
With shouts of "Syria out!" 25,000 protesters massed outside Parliament in a dramatic display of defiance that forced out Lebanon's pro-Syrian prime minister and Cabinet Monday, two weeks after the assassination of a popular politician touched off increasing unrest. Demonstrators demanded that Syrian-backed President Emile Lahoud resign too.

Crowd cheers takeoff

SALINA, Kan. – Crowd members cheered and ran along with the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer as it departed Monday evening.

Pilots, World War II veterans, airport employees and spectators from around the world made up the 8,000 people who lined the runway.

They came to see history in the making as pilot Steve Fossett began his attempt to fly solo non-stop around the world without refueling.

Norlan Ferguson, a pilot from McPherson, Kan., said he waited three hours to see the record breaking attempt take off.

It was worth the wait, however, because the flight could mark another milestone in aviation history, Ferguson said.

"In 100 years, we went from flying a few feet to around the world," he said.

Rita Cross (right) sits with her children Eric and Kayla prior to the GlobalFlyer takeoff. Cross said she wanted to bring her children so that they could have the opportunity to witness such a once-in-a-lifetime event.

Aviation records may not be the only thing that could change. This event could put Salina on the map, Robert Maxey, employee at Salina Municipal Airport and Salina resident, said.

"I don't know if it will or not, but I sure hope so," he said. "Salina could use that."

Students from St. John's Military School in Salina volunteered for the event and parked cars for about five hours.

Private Neil Sorenson said the GlobalFlyer attempt reminded him of past aviation attempts.

"I think it's comparable to the Charles Lindbergh flight," he said.

Seven K-State-Salina students helped the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer team prepare the plane for take off beginning at 7 a.m. Monday.

The students have been working in between classes for two months. Mike Paul, junior in aviation maintenance, said helping with it and keeping up with classes has been a balancing act.

Before the flight, the students helped by running wires for equipment, sending engine components to manufacturers for testing, putting on new sets of tires and putting in the new NASA video equipment.

The students will be watching the mission control room during the flight. Upon GlobalFlyer's return, they will be back to work doing post-flight inspections.

As far as the flight goes, all they can do now is sit back and wait, Joshua Hill, junior in aviation maintenance, said.

"If we did our job right, everything should go smoothly," he said.

Spending similar for candidates

ELECTIONS 2005

Voting for Student Governing Association primary elections begins 8 a.m. today and ends 6 p.m. Wednesday. Vote at www.k-state.edu/elections.

Only $230.27 separates the top three presidential candidate duos, and the fourth spent less than $100 on its campaign.

Candidate pair Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner were the top spenders with $2,666.86. They were followed by Andrew Treaster and David Hart with $2,576.94, then Michael Burns and Grant Groene with $2,436.59. Bill Schmit and Jack Holtzen were the lowest spenders with $95.42.

Treaster and Hart had the most through personal contributions with $800.94, which means they committed their second minor campaign violation.

Candidates are not allowed to have more than $800 in personal contributions for their campaign.

Personal contributions include the money candidates themselves put into the campaign, special discounts they get from businesses that were not offered to other candidates and donations from anyone who is not a K-State student.

Most money is spent on posters and t-shirts.

In years past, the winning candidates also were among the top spenders.

Student Body President and Vice President Hayley Urkevich and Erik Ankrom spent the most with $2,980.93 last year. Second-place finishers Vicki Conner and Jeremy Sandall spent $2,487.10, which was the second most.

Former president and vice president John O'Hara and Travis Stryker spent the most with $2,445.16 in 2003. The second-place finishers, Tammy Jo Osborn and Julie Quackenbush, spent $969.97, which was the second-highest amount.

Kyle Barker and Brandon Kauffman, former president and vice president, were the second-highest spenders in 2002 with $1,932.60. The runners-up, Travis Lenkner and Mary Bosco, were the top spenders with $2,647.93.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said the candidates that spend the most money usually have more support, because they get more student contributions.

Students can contribute up to $20 on a campaign.

"That's a reflection of the fact they have the most support to begin with," he said. "Spending more money enables you to buy more posters, more t-shirts.

"That name recognition is vital."

Manhattan has $2 million excess from sales tax

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While the U.S. budget is in a serious deficit, Manhattan's budget is in a rare state – with a $2.8-million excess.

According to Manhattan's budget sheet, the city budgeted $1,100,000 in the General Operating fund for the 2005 fiscal year. As the result of an unanticipated sales increase, sales tax revenues have already generated $2,192,704.

In the sales tax transfer fund, $500,000 was budgeted and sales tax revenues have additionally produced $1,177,846.

Thus, the city of Manhattan has an unexpected $2,863,254 to work with.

Bernie Hayen, director of finance for Manhattan, said the surplus can be attributed to new retailers and restaurants, such as Target and Panera Bread Co., that Manhattan has attracted.

"A lot of people hate 'big box' stores," Hayen said, "but they bring in lots of money."

This budget surplus was not anticipated because, according to Kansas law, the city's budget must be adopted by Aug. 15 which is often difficult to do considering the year being budgeted is four months away, Hayen said.

"One of the goals of the downtown redevelopment is to keep many of our local businesses, but also bring in more nationally recognized retailers, making Manhattan more of a regional shopping area," Fehr said.

Although this newfound business situation is seemingly flawless in generating sales revenues for Manhattan, Fehr said it is wise to be skeptical when dealing with money.

Whatever the case, Manhattan is in possession of an additional $2.8 million, and they are not sure what to do with it.

"For the time being," Fehr said, "I recommended the city put the money into reserves."

Hayen said he agrees with Fehr's suggestion for multiple reasons.

For one, on April 5, Manhattan votes for its new city commissioners, and on April 19 the new commissioners will officially take office. Manhattan must wait for the new commissioners since they decide where the money is distributed.

City commissioner Bruce Snead shares Hayen's sentiments, and said he believes the money is best left untouched, for now.

"I think the money should be put into a sort of rainy day fund for now, and possibly allocated to smaller development projects in the future," Snead said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Surplus funds should be used for future city development

With more than $2 million in unexpected sales tax revenue, the city of Manhattan has a rare opportunity to adequately support more ongoing development projects within the community.

The recent increase of retailers in Manhattan has led to a significant boost in the city's sales tax revenue.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The volatility of sales tax revenue and the collective goal of lowering property taxes makes long-term budgetary predictions unclear, but the fact remains that Manhattan has nearly a $2.9 million surplus.

Now that the city has seen the revenue potential brought by new openings in locations such as Seth Child Commons, Manhattan officials should begin looking at projected budgets with an eye toward increased support for community development projects.

Our new city commissioners take office on April 19, and budget planning for 2006 begins in May. The new officials will have several options concerning Manhattan's excess revenue.

While the surplus could be used to lessen the burden of ever-rising property taxes, the relief would be slight.

Downtown redevelopment and improvement projects are ongoing. Manhattan needs to fully support its small businesses and downtown area.

The excess sales tax revenue provides the necessary funds to support additional development of downtown Manhattan.

Political party split

Dean righting the ship while Republican boat sinks

SCOTT SEEL

As a Democrat, I cringe when I hear names such as John Kerry and Al Gore mentioned in my presence.

When I hear pundits predict that Hillary Clinton will run for president in 2008, I shake my head in dismay.

However, recent events have given me reason to hope.

I can sum up the bright future of the Democratic Party in two words: Howard Dean.

I'll wait until you're done making fun of his infamous scream. Then we can return to intelligent discourse.

Despite what Sean Hannity tells you, Dean is actually quite moderate when you turn off the Fox News ticker running through your brain and look at his politics.

Yes, I wear Birkenstocks, but I hate bean sprouts and I managed to get out of bed just before the polls closed last November, so Mr. Manning is somewhat off.

I was blessed to see Dean speak this past week at Washburn University, and he eased all the anxiety I've had with my party since Bill Clinton left office.

In his speech, Chairman Dean (damn, it feels good to say that) showed his true colors.

The basis of Dean's plan for the Democratic Party is a return to local and state politics. Essentially, he wants to empower the average American in what he calls a "bottom-up" approach to party leadership.

That is why Dean is the best man for the job. He empowers everyone from labor unions to pacifists to Republicans who don't believe God is their political motivation.

Dean gives the party something it hasn't had in awhile: conviction.

Al Gore is an android and John Kerry is a flip-flopper and a panderer, but Dean has a message.

He says what he believes and people tend to respect that even if they disagree with him.

Dean is a vibrant leader who can unite the party and enable Democrats to champion one side rather than just loathing the other.

If all this optimism were not enough to make me smile, the Republican Party in our state is radically out of touch with reality.

The plight of the Kansas Republican party can be boiled down to two words: Tim Shallenburger.

With right-wing nut-jobs like its newly anointed party chair Shallenburger and that clown Kansas Attorney General, the Republican Party in this state is doing whatever it can to drive out reasonably-minded moderates.

Apparently undaunted by losing the governorship, the Republican Party officially closed the coffin on moderate politics by declaring the 2002 gubernatorial loser and former Pizza Hut manager its fearless leader.

It's now official. The platform of the Republican Party reads (and I'm paraphrasing here), "No gays, no taxes, no abortions and all the guns we want."

This swing to the neo-conservative religious right will be the death of the Republicans, and it's not just happening in Kansas.

Republicans are going to get caught up in mixing morality and politics and lose the moderates that they need to win elections.

This is evident in the Kansas Legislature, where Republicans are ignoring both state and federal constitutional law and focusing on such issues as gay marriage, all while our school system is in utter disarray.

After all, God didn't tell them to fix the schools. An activist judge did.

This rift in their party is setting Republicans up for a disastrous split in the very near future.

Whether a slew of moderates jump ship and become conservative Democrats or create a whole new moderate party is anyone's guess, but the Republicans have shot themselves in the foot with the .50 cal that Jonas Hogg is so adamant about his right to possess.

With Dean at the helm, Democrats will face disaster

JESSE MANNING

There are many great moments of defeat in history: Hannibal's loss at Zama, Atahualpa's fall to Pizarro, the crumbling of the Berlin Wall and the toppling of Baghdad's statue of Saddam Hussein.

Just as Rome, Spain, Western democracy and the United States emerged victorious from the above conflicts, so too will the Republican party stand victorious in the smoking ruins of the inevitable collapse of the Democrats. Another great moment of failure happened last month when Howard Dean was handed the keys to the Democratic party.

The Democrats are gluttons for punishment. First, Dean underwhelmed the nation and lost the Democratic presidential nomination to Senator John Kerry. Kerry then managed to totally screw up his campaign – which should have easily bested President Bush – and led the Dems to another humiliating defeat.

Now, in what I can only assume to be desperation, the Democrats are turning back to Howard Dean. Expect 2006 and 2008 to be "rebuilding years" for the Dems.

Mr. Seel is correct about one thing: Dean is not the leftist wacko that he's made out to be. But Dean's grassroots efforts only energize a certain vocal segment of the Democratic Party: those sprout-eating, Birkenstock-wearing Democrats who usually end up sleeping through Election Day.

Despite the relative moderation of Dr. Dean, his followers – the Deaniacs – will undoubtedly steer the USS Democrat hard to port (that's left for you non-seagoing types). Wanting to make clear distinctions between the Democrats and the Republicans, the liberal supporters of Dean will hold the Dems hostage to a leftist agenda.

While this is good for purposes of highlighting differences between the two parties, it makes Democrats unelectable. Fearing complete electoral disaster, blue-dog Democrats who are concerned about the folks in flyover country will abandon ship, creating a huge schism within Democrat-land.

And out of the ashes will rise a phoenix – or rather, a bigger, stronger, more electable elephant.

Disaffected conservative Democrats will find the Republican party an accommodating home, bolstering the GOP's already swelling numbers. With the ascension of such a controversial figure as Dean, the Democratic party as you know it today has almost assuredly guaranteed its own demise.

That's not to say Republicans are without their own problems. With conservatives at the helm, Kansas Republicans especially seem to have their priorities mixed up. Religiously conservative issues can overshadow other important matters, making the Republican party seem uninviting to those searching for a new political home.

However, Republicans have the ability to look past the differences they may have within the party in order to elect one Republican for the greater good of the whole.

Fiscal conservatives may disagree with President Bush's social stances, but they realize that a vote for Michael Badnarik and the Libertarians would be a vote for the Democratic party.

True social conservatives may hold more liberal economic views, but they'll support the Republicans to see their social agendas fought for.

The GOP, in essence, has become the "big tent" party, with members accepting some opposing views in order to have others recognized. The Democratic party is quickly losing the broad appeal that it once held.

In 2004, the Democrats grudgingly agreed on one candidate. After John Kerry was nominated, the Dems only halfheartedly supported him, knowing he wasn't the "one true candidate" they had been seeking.

With Dean's nomination, that true candidate may never come. Only further divisiveness can occur for the Democrats, with the very liberal insisting that their views are brought to the forefront and the moderates trying to appeal to those who already vote Republican.

Movie theater upgrading seating

Seth Child Cinema renovating theaters for stadium seating

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Seth Childs Cinema is undergoing renovations, resulting in a drop in available seating.

Renovations began in January on the theater, and are set to be finished by the end of April, said Jerry Hale of Wyatt Entertainment, who is doing the work out of Orlando, Fla.

Hale said six of the 12 theaters are being switched from regular sloped seating to stadium seating, and they will lose around 70 seats.

The other six already have stadium seating.

Judy Russell, director of investor and public relations for Carmike Cinemas, which owns Seth Childs, said this is just part of a regular upgrade.

"We do a continual upgrade of all of our theaters, and it was just time to convert them to stadium," she said.

The theaters will have new, plush seats with adjustable arm rests, Russell said.

"Stadium seating offers every patron an unobstructed view of the screen," she said. "It's just a better movie-going experience."

There also will be improvements made to the concession area and the outside entry, she said.

Hale said those improvements are not included in the end of April finish.

Ron Fowles, owner of Ron Fowles Construction, is doing some subcontracting work. Fowles said he is one of many local subcontractors working on the project.

Hale said they generally use local people for work.

"Most of who we use are local subcontractors," he said. "We've got a few that specialize in certain things that travel with us."

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN
Renovations on Seth Childs Cinema are scheduled to be completed by the end of April. The renovations, which began in January, will convert the regular sloped seating to stadium seating.

Russell said that for the time being, six theaters limit variety.

"We like to offer a large variety," she said. "With six screens being closed, it's difficult to offer everything."

Wefald to appear on ESPN to discuss Negro Leagues

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

President Jon Wefald will be televised on the ESPN show Cold Pizza talking about Negro League Baseball.

Wefald

There is currently a deal with Warner Bros. domestic television distribution to make a mini-series that will talk about the legacy of the baseball league.

Bob Kendrick, director of marketing for the Negro Leagues Baseball Museum in Kansas City, said it is important to spread the true story behind the leagues.

"It's really America's untold history. It's much bigger than any baseball story. It really is the story of America that hasn't been documented anywhere," Kendrick said.

Kendrick said Wefald has been working to get the story out about the sport.

"Wefald has been one of the great supporters on the history of this sport and he has been very passionate about getting the word out about it," he said.

According to a press release from K-State Media Relations, the program will be featured in the K-State Student Union from 7 to 9 a.m. on Wednesday.

The program will be replayed from 9 to 11 a.m. in the Union Food Court.

There will also be a Origins special during this time. Food Services will be featuring a "League Special," with a works omelette, hash browns and a cup of coffee for $3.49 from 7 to 10 a.m.

Jack Connaughton, associate director for the Union, said the directors like their changing programs.

"We appreciate the variety of opportunities we get to program. Last year, we had a nice display of artwork from the Negro Leagues in the art gallery. We had Buck O'Neil (famous Negro Leagues baseball player) on campus when we did the art show," Connaughton said.

Connaughton said there were a few reasons why the Union is showing the program.

"Having the combination of the topic and our president speaking would be of interest to the campus community," he said.

Primary election for City Commissioners today

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eight City Commission candidates will be narrowed down to six after the primary today.

Voting begins at 7 a.m. in 13 places around Riley County for locally registered voters.

Jolene Campbell, deputy county clerk, said there are many places where people can vote. The location all depends on where people live.

Campbell said that anyone who wants to know where to go to vote should call the Riley County clerk's office at 537-6300.

Time constraints should not be a problem since the people that live in Riley County are usually the only ones that vote, she said.

"There should not be any lines since this is usually a poorly attended election," she said.

She said K-State students should care about this election.

"The people that run the city of Manhattan determine how things are run," she said. "Tax dollars are always on subject and these are taxes that students pay; also, housing is very important."

Campbell said if students want to vote they need to be aware that where they live determines where they vote. The polls close at 7 p.m. tonight.

Gary Fees, city clerk for the city of Manhattan, said the general election is April 5 and the newly elected city commissioners begin their duties April 19.

"There are three spots open for city commissioner and the top two vote-getters will receive a four year term and third place will be given a two year term," Fees said.

Fees said that he assumes the turnout for the general election will be much larger.

"Whether you are a K-State student or a member of the Manhattan community, it is important to get involved," he said.

Baseball team fails academic reform standards

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State athletics were put to the test academically – and by and large, they passed.

Fifteen of the Wildcats' 16 intercollegiate athletic teams stood up to the NCAA's new academic reform standards, released on Monday.

The new standards are based on the Academic Progress Rate which used data compiled from all NCAA-member institutions from the 2003-04 academic year.

The APR takes into account eligibility and retention of student-athletes who receive financial aid, and a "cut-rate" score of 925 was established by the NCAA as the satisfactory mark.

All K-State sports met the minimum requirement except baseball.

"We're pleased that all but one of our sports currently meets this initial requirement, but it's important to note that where our individual sports stand in relation to APR is just a one-year snapshot," Director of Athletics Tim Weiser said in a release.

Monday's data on every NCAA institution does not carry any immediate consequences. It is just a test-run, as penalties will not be handed out until the 2005-06 academic year is completed and 2004-05 data is combined with data from 2003-04.

Weiser
DIRECTOR OF ATHLETICS

"Eventually, it will become a four-year rolling average," Weiser said. "So for any sports which are currently below the cut rate, there is still the opportunity to meet or exceed the cut rate."

K-State was similar to many schools across the nation as some of its lowest scores were in baseball, men's basketball and football.

Those were the lone sports whose national average fell below the 925 cut-off that is based on a 50 percent graduation rate. The Wildcats scored an 875 in baseball, an 886 in men's basketball and a 912 in football.

Though K-State men's basketball, football and men's cross country (882) were below 925, they all were within the NCAA's "confidence boundary" that bumped them over the satisfactory rate. The "confidence boundary" is in place due to small sample sizes for some teams and limitations on data

WBB | Wecker named Big 12 Player of the Week

K-State senior forward Kendra Wecker was the Big 12 Women's Player of the Week for games played from Feb. 21-27, the Big 12 Conference announced Monday.

Wecker

It is the third time this season and ninth time in her career that Wecker has been chosen as the conference's player of the week.

This week, in blowout wins over Nebraska and Kansas, Wecker tallied 39 total points and collected 26 rebounds. She also recorded a season-high seven assists against the Huskers.

Wecker has 49 career double-doubles, which is second best in Big 12 history behind Iowa State's Angie Welle (54).

Tennis | Venus Williams ousted in 1st round

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — Venus Williams struggled with a blister on her right palm and lost in the first round for the first time in four years, beaten by Italy's Silvia Farina Elia 7-5, 7-6 (6) in the Dubai Women's Open on Monday.

Williams

Williams' previous first-round ouster was to Barbara Schett at the 2001 French Open. She also lost her opening match at Moscow in October 2002 to Magdalena Maleeva but after a first-round bye.

Trip to Nebraska sickens columnist

I found out last week just how hard the life of a sports writer can actually be.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

Last Wednesday, the K-State women's basketball team traveled to Lincoln, Neb., to take on the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

I like to travel, and since Lincoln is only a little more than two hours away, I decided to follow the team in order to provide students with a first-hand description of the game.

My mind and heart wanted to go, but somewhere along the way, my stomach decided it was not happy about traveling into the land of the Huskers.

Maybe it was the idea of the whole Husker nation – that I had successfully angered a few weeks ago with another one of my columns – taking out their rage on me that turned my stomach.

Husker fans are probably upset that I was in their beloved state and they missed out on the chance to make their threats to me in person rather than by the e-mails that flooded my inbox.

I tend to believe that the state of Nebraska in general made me sick. Nebraska is one of those places that, along with Lawrence, has a way of making one physically ill.

Whatever the reason, just outside of Lincoln, my stomach decided everything must leave.

My lunch – all over me and the seat of my friend's car.

I obviously could not go into the basketball game in that condition, so I cleaned up as best I could, took my friend's car to the local Wal-Mart and picked up some sweet new threads.

In my rush to get to the game on time, I didn't try on the jeans I picked out. I grabbed the size I normally wear, paid and rushed back to the Devaney Sports Center.

As I began to change in the parking lot, I discovered a huge problem: the jeans I had bought were ridiculously small.

We are talking 1980s-style, circulation-cutting, ankle-showing jeans that had no business on anyone.

Alas, I was stuck with them. I guess that's what you get for paying $10 for a pair of jeans... from Wal-Mart... in Nebraska.

I scurried to my seat on press row, where I sat with my head in my hands, trying to ease the pain of my stomach and the blast-from-the-past jeans.

The next day, I was feeling no better, but that didn't stop me from shredding those horrid jeans.

Word travelled fast, and I took a lot of friendly ribbing from my fellow sports writers for the puking and the jeans, but I don't care, I was trying to do my job.

I am feeling much better now. The illness is gone and so are those sickening jeans.

It is a pretty funny story, but maybe I should think twice about traveling back to Nebraska if that's what happens when I do.

Baseball back home

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
Steve Murphy slides into home during a non-conference game last season. The Wildcats play their first home game this afternoon at Tointon Family Stadium against Creighton. The Bluejays have won five straight games with two game sweeps of Northern Colorado and Saint Louis University.

Creighton visits Manhattan to begin home schedule

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State will take the field in its home opener today against the Creighton Bluejays.

"It's nice to come back home," Head Coach Brad Hill said. "The guys are still trying to find themselves and are searching for their identity. It's good to be back home and try to establish that."

K-State will be facing a hot Creighton team that is showing opposing teams what it is capable of.

"I like that way that they play," Hill said. "They will come at you and you have to be ready."

The Bluejays are riding a five-game winning streak, having recorded back-to-back sweeps of Northern Colorado and a two-game sweep of Saint Louis this past weekend.

K-State will be facing Bluejays' junior starting pitcher Adam Schaecher. The righty is 0-0, having pitched 9.0 innings with a 6.14 ERA.

"They are the type of team that you have to play well," junior Steve Murphy said. "You have to bring your 'A' game or you get beat."

The Wildcats are coming off a solid weekend, where they took two of three games at the Northwestern State Tournament in Natchitoches, La.

Friday's loss handed senior pitcher Mitch Walter his first loss on the season, despite a strong outing. Walter gave up just four hits in 6.0 innings, but two of the hits were solo home runs.

In the first game of Saturday's doubleheader, Eastern Michigan University felt the power of the K-State offense, as the Wildcats stomped EMU, 15-4.

The offensive barrage was led by junior Barrett Rice, who hit two solo home runs, and junior David Baker, who drove in five runs for the Wildcats.

"I've been hitting extra after practice," Rice said. "I'm just seeing the ball good and its helping me hit well."

K-State followed the win over EMU with an 8-1 victory over Northern Iowa.

Junior Adam Cowart gave K-State his second solid outing, striking out 10 while not walking a batter in 8.0 innings.

"After being on the road for three weeks it will be good to play on our own yard," Murphy said. "The excitement of playing at home will get us pumped up."

Radio rights sold to Leerfield Communications

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The exclusive broadcast rights to K-State athletics have been sold to Leerfield Communications, Inc., of Jefferson City, Mo., K-State Director of Athletics Tim Weiser announced on Monday.

The radio rights had been held by the Mid America Sports Network and its owner, Larry Steckline.

Greg Steckline, vice president of the Mid America Ag Network, said the sale to Leerfield was the result of some changes within MASN.

"My father has decided to not necessarily retire, but slow down regarding his day to day workload, and in that decision, I purchased the network from him," Greg Steckline said. "Then, within the last couple of weeks, we got a call from Leerfield, and they began expressing interest in acquiring the radio rights. With their expertise and knowledge of sports broadcasting, they can do a much better job than we could."

The sale, which guarantees K-State annual cash payments of $1.1 million, is effective immediately, but MASN will be allowed to broadcast athletics through the end of the season.

"I appreciate what Larry Steckline did for us," Weiser said in a released statement. "He took a gamble on K-State and established a higher value in the marketplace for our radio rights while forging a network that, obviously, became attractive to others in the business."

Leerfield's acquisition of the radio rights is for the remaining two years of the five-year contract K-State agreed to with MASN. Weiser said discussions with Leerfield would begin to extend the agreement past the expiration year of 2006-07.

With the addition of K-State to the Leerfield sports family, the communications business now broadcasts 19 schools' collegiate athletic events. These include Big 12 members Oklahoma, Missouri and Colorado, and nationally, schools such as Alabama, Iowa, Miami, Penn State and Wisconsin.

"Leerfield is recognized in collegiate athletics as one of the best – if not the best – in the business," Weiser said. "We're certainly proud to join its family. Leerfield has a great amount of expertise and resources that we believe will allow us to continue expanding the reach of Wildcat athletics to our fan base."

Greg Brown, senior vice president for Leerfield, said he is excited about broadcasting K-State sporting events.

"We are thrilled to work with Tim Weiser and the other folks at K-State," Brown said. "We appreciate the opportunity Larry Steckline has given us and look forward to serving Kansas State University and its sponsor, stations and fans.

"Our goal is to contribute to the growth of K-State athletics, he said."

The influence of Talking Heads

By Jessica Grant and Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When they met David Byrne at the Rhode Island School of Design in the early 1970s, Chris Frantz and Tina Weymouth probably had no idea that the trio would go on to create one of the most influential bands in history.

And in 1974, when the band moved to their loft apartment in New York City, their idealistic young heads were most likely filled with visions of hope shrouded by the bitter realities of making it in the music industry.

However, they did not let poverty and the slim possibility of success in the music industry sully their dreams.

They were going to make it. They were Talking Heads.

Talking Heads did it all.

From writing insanely catchy pop tunes that defied musical boundaries to creating films to developing exhilarating visual and musical live shows, Talking Heads proved to be one of the most influential bands in recent history.

The trio saw its first break in 1975 when they opened for the Ramones at CBGB.

After signing Jerry Harrison, the noted keyboardist from the new wave group Modern Lovers in 1976, Talking Heads created the core of the band.

In 1977, the band signed to Sire Records and released "Talking Heads: 77," a rock and roll album whose jerky feel was offset by intellectual lyrics. The band saw a minor hit with the song "Psycho Killer," a piece that introduced the world to the bizarre wailings, grunts and bravado of lead singer Byrne.

1978 saw the release of "More Songs About Buildings and Food." With the help of legendary producer Brian Eno, the Talking Heads expanded its punk sound by adding a funk flair that would become the band's signature.

Talking Heads refined its sound even more with the 1979 release of "Fear of Music," which relied more heavily on the rhythm section by adding African polyrhythms, as exhibited on the song "I Zimbra."

1980 was the musical golden year for Talking Heads; the year that the monumental album "Remain in Light" was released. (It is appropriate to add that both authors find this to be one of the greatest albums ever created.)

Around this time, the Heads temporarily split up to work on solo projects. Jerry Harrison released his first solo album. Byrne and Eno collaborated to release "My Life in the Bush of Ghosts."

The album had a huge influence on sample-based electronica music that would become prominent in the 1990s. Chris Frantz and Tina Weymouth formed Tom Tom Club and had a minor hit with "Genius of Love."

However, the band had not yet met its demise. After a brief leave, Talking Heads released "Speaking in Tongues" in 1983, an album that had a more accessible pop song structure. From that album, the song "Burning Down the House" was released and became the band's biggest hit.

After releasing the straightforward pop album "Little Creatures" in 1985, David Byrne directed and starred in the movie "True Stories" and released an album of the same name.

Talking Heads officially broke up in 1991. In 1999, Talking Heads put aside their differences and promoted the 15th anniversary of "Stop Making Sense". In 2002, Talking Heads were inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

David Byrne is notorious for never ending any conversation with "goodbye." There is something prophetic about this statement, for David Byrne and company managed to create a sound that the world will never leave behind.

Talking Heads: '77
David Byrne's hyperbolic persona is introduced to the world through his intelligent lyrics, bizarre vocal stylings and jerky brand of punk music.

More Songs about Buildings and Food
The band combines with producer Brian Eno, who fleshes out the band's sound to create the funky, energetic sound that became their trademark.

Fear of Music
With an increased rhythm section and a focus on African rhythms, the band began to refine their musical explorations.

Remain in Light
The band's experimentation became actualized with this album. Few albums blur the lines of musical achievement as this does. The quintessential Talking Heads album.

The Name of this Band is Talking Heads
An essential live double album. This is an excellent starting point for someone new to the Talking Heads.

Stop Making Sense
The vital Talking Heads movie directed by Jonathan Demme that illustrated the dynamic nature of the bands' live performances. For added pleasure, pick up the special edition movie soundtrack.

Jackson's day in court

Jurors were given opposing images of Michael Jackson as the pop star's trial opened Monday with the prosecution portraying him as a perverted child molester and the defense saying he was the victim of a con artist who used her cancer-stricken son to prey on celebrities for money.

Jackson

District Attorney Thomas Sneddon outlined a complicated and sometimes bizarre story alleging that Jackson showed the boy sexually explicit material and groped him.

Sneddon said the boy, now 15, will describe to the jury his sexual experiences with Jackson and show that the musician's Neverland Ranch was a devilish lair.

Jury for Lil' Kim chosen

The jury was chosen Monday for rapper Lil' Kim's case. She faces charges of conspiracy and perjury. Her lawyer said the case against her was not an indictment of the rap or hip-hop music industries.

Jones

The charges were brought against the entertainer, whose real name is Kimberly Jones, by prosecutors who accused her of lying to a grand jury investigating a 2001 shooting involving members of her entourage.

Last August, Lil' Kim told a news conference that the case was part of the government's continued indictment against the hip-hop industry and that her innocence would be proved.

KSU Opera Theater to perform at McCain

By Addie Laue
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Opera Theater will open a performance at McCain Auditorium Thursday night.

The production, "Street Scene," will be performed by vocal performance majors, musical theater majors and theater majors.

Reg Pittman, director of the show, said the full-length production will include all facets of the theatrical experience, including sets, costumes, sound, lighting and piano and orchestra accompaniment.

"This opera is an ensemble type of production," Pittman said. "There are many roles, so we have over 30 cast members."

Austin Short, who plays one of the lead roles, said the show is a mixture of musical theater and opera.

"It includes spoken lines as well as singing, so it is considered musical theater," Short said. "It can also be considered an opera because the music is more sophisticated."

The full-length opera is part of opera theater, which has been in existence for over 25 years. It also includes an opera workshop concert which was performed in the fall and included scenes from opera, operetta and Broadway musical theater.

Short said the show is a good opportunity for students and the community to support the music department.

"We would like everyone to come out and see it," Short said. "It is a great opportunity for anyone to broaden their horizons if they have never seen an opera before."

'Black Comedy' offers ironic look

By Nathan Dorsett
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Black Comedy" is a play that celebrates the distinction between those on the stage and the rest of the world, with all but the exit signs left in black, lending irony to the title.

This farcical play by the Oscar- and BAFTA-nominated playwright Paul Schaffer took the stage at the Manhattan Arts Center Friday.

The play is based upon a traditional Japanese Noh theater concept, in which the lights are on when the actors are blinded by a blown fuse, and the lights are out when the actors can see.

With the ongoing revival of 1960s fashion and a need for political dissent, "Black Comedy" is light-hearted enough to bridge some gaps in the community with effortless plays on class consciousness, courtesy of the ruses of the young against the rich character of the old.

"It's the strongest cast that I've worked with in my 35 years of being involved with Manhattan theater," Larry Marcellus, the actor playing multi-billionaire Bamberger, said after the play's packed debut Friday.

The set is crammed with knick-knacks bought from local thrift stores but instantly become treasures within the actors' hands, Cim Roesener, costume designer, said.

The plot begs for interpretation with references to early 1960s pop culture, most evident in the brown-striped polyester pants and olive green braided belt worn by Brindsley's neighbor, Harold Gorringe, played by Kim Riley.

All of the costumes were designed by Cim Roesener, a graduate of Emporia State in costume design.

In the end, after the stage blacked out at the end of the show, the audience gave applause into the dark and filled the lobby to sample some different kinds of British cuisine.

Those who attended had the opportunity to try the cheese which is so sought after that they celebrate it with a cheese rolling contest as a part of a festival held at Cooper's Hill (not far from Gloucester, England) each year.

"It was hilarious. I laughed my ass off," Melissa Veldman, sophomore in chemical engineering and chemistry, said.

Some people, such as Julie Man, said they just enjoyed going to a place to laugh.

"The Manhattan Arts Center really brings the community together. We have some students and retired folks," Roesener said.

The light and dark of the play reveal to the audience the depths to which we are each subject to our own farces in attempting to obtain our daily goals, while still deserving of sympathy.

"Black Comedy" insists that we each take a step back and laugh at our own lives, if only a small nervous one, or a few, as Mott reveals during the course of the play.

ACADEMICS
K-State sports address with education reform

The baseball team's graduation rate was 62 percent, but Weiser said high roster turnover that came with second-year head coach Brad Hill and the loss of retention points was the main reason for the sport's score.

"The graduation rates of our sports tend to exceed that of the general student body," Weiser said. "But, with these new standards in place, it can take the loss of just a couple of student-athletes who transfer or don't complete their academic requirements in a semester to significantly impact a team's APR standing."

K-State got its best APR performances from the volleyball and women's tennis teams, as each scored 1,000, 35 and 33 points above their sport's national average, respectively.

The landmark NCAA academic reform was passed in January. The NCAA Division I Board of Directors approved the APR and made scholarship reduction a punishment for schools that don't measure up.

If penalties were instituted today instead of next year, 7 percent of all NCAA teams would be penalized and a little more than half of all Division I schools would have at least one team that did not make the grade.

Weiser said K-State is ready to deal with the new academic standards.

"We've invested heavily in academic support programs for our student-athletes and our coaches understand the significance of this new legislation," Weiser said. "We feel like we're well prepared and ahead of the curve on this issue.

"I've said many times that the most important purpose we serve is to provide our student-athletes with the best possible experience while at K-State. My hope is always that each of them will walk across the stage at graduation reaching for a diploma with a championship ring on their hand."

FLYER | Flight takes off after numerous delays

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Sir Richard Branson talks with news media following a successful takeoff by the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer at the Salina Municipal Airport Monday.

takeoff was the first time the plane had flown with a full fuel load. Previous test flights were only filled up to 80 percent.

The plane will fly at an average speed of 287.5 mph and will carry 15 percent extra fuel in case of unexpected weather or route changes.

"It's a very heavy plane," Sir Richard Branson, chairman of Virgin Atlantic, said. "It dipped just after takeoff. All of us were a bit nervous."

But the takeoff was successful despite launching two minutes after Fossett's limitation of a 6:45 p.m. launch. Fossett will be followed by a chaser plane with Branson flying the first and last leg.

Branson watched the flight takeoff with Fossett's wife, Betty.

"I was standing next to Steve's wife on the runway, which was obviously very emotional," he said. "This stage, without a doubt, was the most dangerous."

Paul Moore, project manager, said while the flight team would have liked to have taken off earlier, the wind speeds were too high.

"They didn't dip down until 10 minutes before takeoff," he said. "It was perfect conditions for takeoff when it actually took place."

The weather conditions could mean not only a record-setting flight but one that will be hard to beat.

"If everything goes according to metrology reports," Branson said, "he will not only be the first to go around but he will go around in incredible speed."

As of late Monday night, Fossett was traveling over Canada. He will spend less than 20 percent of the flight in daylight. He will first see the sun sometime today over Morocco, Branson said.

Mission control for the plane was on the K-State-Salina campus with aviation students working with the flight team.

Salina Dean Dennis Kuhlman said the first three hours of the flight are the most dangerous since the plane is loaded with fuel and cannot encounter turbulence.

Another challenge could arise as Fossett travels through international airspace. The course changed as late as Monday afternoon to avoid military restricted zones around Algeria, which actually shortens the overall length of the trip.

"We're going through a lot of airspaces," Kuhlman said. "We have the clear, and you hope nothing changes. You can't anticipate what could happen."

Fossett is expected back in Salina sometime Thursday. Mission control teams will update the Web site, www.globalflyer.com, with the plane's location.

Getting the plane off the ground was a relief for both the flight team and Salina officials who have been working with the record attempt for years.

"It was exhilarating," Kuhlman said.

"When I heard him say 'breaks released' – that's what I've been waiting for."

CANDIDATES | K-State-Salina presidential candidates disqualified

running for presidents and vice president. Salina votes for the main campus president and vice president as well.

There were three candidate pairs at K-State-Salina, but one was disqualified for not attending the mandatory meetings. Weston Thompson and Dan Kozak, the last pair to file, were disqualified because Kozak didn't attend the meeting.

Adam Volcek, Salina election committee chair, said presidential candidate pairs Joshua Koch with Lindsey Boeckman and Brendan Haiduk with Nathan Gorrell wanted to see how many people would vote for them.

"The two candidates that are left basically requested to have it," Volcek said.

SUSPECT | Police chief warns news media about speculations

"I saw it on the news, and I thought it made sense," she said. "He was just a mean cop."

BTK, which stands for bind, torture, kill, re-emerged in March 2004 taunting police with letters and packages sent to news media outlets.

Adrianne Gipson, senior in apparel marketing, has lived in Wichita since first grade. She said she knew about the BTK investigation.

"I didn't I think they'd ever find him," Gipson said. "I thought he would be immortalized."

She said the information being revealed about Rader is disturbing.

"It was scary. It sounded like something on a movie," Gipson said. "His targets were younger women in daylight. It was very movie-like."

Heather Jabara, senior in interior design, was born and raised in Wichita and lived close to some of the victims' homes.

"He goes after these young college girls," Jabara said. "That was kind of freaky. When I had to stay home by myself ... everyone seemed to be a little more self-conscious."

Jabara said she found out about the arrest when her friend text messaged her and then she watched the news unfold on CNN.

"It was really awesome they caught him," she said. "It's weird to think he was a dad of two kids and a girl here at K-State. He lived two separate lives."

Police chief Norman Williams called a news conference Monday warning news media that public speculation could complicate the investigation.

The Associated Press reported Sunday that an anonymous source reported Rader had confessed to six killings and police were connecting him to as many 13 murders, including the deaths of two Wichita State University students as well as a woman who lived down the street from a known victim.

However, Williams reiterated that police have linked Rader to 10 slayings blamed on BTK. Upset about details being reported, Williams said he would ask prosecutors if they can take legal action against members of the news media.

He refused to elaborate on what information was inaccurate and refused to answer any questions.

Gipson said the arrest, although it brings national attention to Wichita, is a relief.

"I am glad the Wichita police found him, and it's not embarrassing now," Gipson said. "They were chasing him for 30 years. It's nice for Wichita."

6 candidates remain in commission race

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Phillips 1,911 VOTES | Sherow 1,600 VOTES | Hardeman 1,459 VOTES | Hatesohl 1,335 VOTES | Robinson 1,071 VOTES | McCune 1,018 VOTES

Citizens for a Better Manhattan played a role in the City Commission's primary election Tuesday.

Of six candidates who advanced, three had the support of the political action committee. Tom Phillips, Jim Sherow, and Jayme Morris-Hardeman also finished in the top three spots.

Sam Robinson, Brad McCune, and incumbent Mark Hatesohl will also proceed to the general election. Matthew Schindler and Vincent Tracey will not continue.

The general election will take place April 5. The top three finishers will earn a City Commission seat.

Phillips received the popular vote at 20 percent.

"I'm humbled the voters decided to put me in first place," he said. "I was surprised. I was just hoping to be in the top three."

He said CBM helped his campaign by doing a city-wide literature drop.

"They put information for all three candidates in a little baggie in the mailboxes of all registered voters," he said.

Hatesohl came in fourth place with 14 percent of the vote.

"I'm pleased I made it through the primary, but disappointed I came in fourth," he said. "Apparently, we didn't get our people to turn out as well as CBM got their people to turn out."

Hatesohl said he has not yet done much campaigning and plans to step it up for the general election.

Schindler, who narrowly missed the general election with 9 percent of the vote, said CBM gave some candidates an unfair advantage.

"When we have a coalition that is supposedly bipartisan backing

KSDB-FM 91.9 is to announce the primary election results shortly after voting ends at 6 tonight.

Andrew Latham, program director at 91.9, said the results will be announced as soon as the station receives them.

Latham said it has been announced at 7 p.m. the last few years, but it will probably be closer to 6:15 p.m.

"It could be a little earlier this year," he said. "We'll announce it as soon as we get it."

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said the reason it will be earlier is because it is just the primary elections.

"There are less results to process for the primary election than the general," he said. "Usually there's more people voting in the general election."

For the general election it will be closer to 7 p.m., he said.

The results can be reported after the Office of Mediated Education gives them to the Office of Student Activities and Services, McCandless said.

The OME monitors the numbers as they come in, he said.

"They monitor not the actual votes, but the numbers as they come in, so X number of people have voted," McCandless said.

Latham said 91.9 will announce the results and talk to the candidates.

"We've actually got four different reporters for the different campaigns," he said. "We'll be

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

On the day police believe his former wife was slain, K-State English professor Thomas Murray arrived earlier than usual to drop their daughter off for the day, a baby sitter testified at his murder trial.

As Murray's trial entered its third week in Douglas County District Court, the state had called 25 witnesses by the end of the day Monday, with perhaps another 30 to go. Murray is accused of killing Carmin Ross at her home near Lawrence in November 2003.

The couple, divorced earlier that year after 18 years of marriage, shared custody of their daughter, then four years old. Lacey Bonine, who babysat for the little girl when she was staying with her father in Manhattan, testified Monday that he arrived with her about 8:20 or 8:25 a.m. on Nov. 13, which she said was Paying by plastic is common – especially among young adults between the ages of 18 and 24.

The popularity of credit cards when combined with aggressive marketing practices has turned into long-term debt and a potential lack of future employment for college students.

"Credit card companies are definitely aggressive," Staci Foveaux, freshman in kinesiology said. "Most of them don't even tell you what they're calling about, they just ask for your information."

She said she has received 10 calls from credit card companies during her time at K-state. The calls were made to her cellphone, unlisted in any phone directory.

"I don't know where they got my phone number," Foveaux said.

Her stance on credit cards emphasized patience in spending, she said.

"I'd rather wait and buy something with cash than use a credit card and pay someone 21 percent extra and have it sooner," said Foveaux.

Though only just recently eligible for a credit card, she has a credit card through Visa, and said she always keeps her monthly debt below $30. She has a $700 spending limit.

"It's never exceeded $30, but most months I pay it off," Foveaux said. "I recommend getting a credit card with a smaller spending limit, so that you can get used to higher interest rates."

One reason why student debt isn't obvious to most people is because students aren't covered by the Consumer Finance Survey, a survey used to measure the ways people pay for their products.

Carol Young, extension specialist in Financial Management at the College of Human Ecology, said the problem may lead to unexpected problems in their future.

Fossett experiences early global positioning problems in GlobalFlyer, passes halfway point

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

GlobalFlyer

K-State-Salina is participating in an attempt by a GlobalFlyer airplane pilot to fly solo around the world without refueling.

Steve Fossett's attempt to fly solo non-stop around the world without refueling sailed smoothly after difficulties early in the flight.

As he crossed the border between the United States and Canada, Fossett began experiencing some problems with the Global Positioning System.

GPS technology helps determine the GlobalFlyer's location based on readings from a system of satellites.

Without this, Fossett would be dependent on Mission Control to know his location.

After approximately two hours of malfunctioning, the GPS system recovered.

However, the team is unsure as to the cause of the problem, according to the Web site.

Fossett passed the halfway point as he flew over the Atlantic Ocean, Africa and part of Asia on Tuesday.

The GlobalFlyer took off from Salina, Kan., at 6:47 p.m. Monday It is expected to return from its flight sometime Thursday afternoon.

K-State students are among them as they work for the Kansas Regents Educational Communication Center to provide a satellite feed to news outlets around the world including CNN, CBS and BBC.

The ECC participates with clients in transmitting news coverage, televised interviews and sports feeds. They are currently working for On the Scene Productions, a company that was hired by Virgin Atlantic to provide media service and public relations.

Matt Sundberg, sophomore in electronic media, was in Salina Sunday and Monday running a camera for interviews and will be going back on Thursday when the flight is expected to return.

Sundberg said he and the rest of the crew were treated like VIPs all weekend.

"I got to meet Sir Richard Branson," he said.

Along with meeting celebrities such as Branson, owner of Virgin Atlantic, Sundberg said this experience will benefit him in the future.

"I can essentially put this on my résumé," he said. "One of the cameras that I was on was sent out all over the globe."

Psychedelic toilet sales to benefit philanthropy

Columbia, Mo. has its share of ghost stories and legends, from the ghost of Frank Rollins at the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity house and the Gray Lady roaming Columbia College to glowing red eyes at Devil's Ice Box.

But these legends, most often told around Halloween and forgotten the rest of the year, don't compare to the tales of Terry Gambill, who runs Missouri Ghosts and Haunts, a St. Louis-based ghost research group. The group investigates paranormal occurrences at private residences, businesses, cemeteries and any other reportedly haunted sites.

Ghost stories in Columbia can be recited easily, but differ from Gambill's experiences.

The story of the ghost of Frank Rollins Jr. or the little girl who haunts the Phi Psi house are Columbia favorites.

With a little help from his fraternity brothers, Phi Psi treasurer Matt Flick can tell both stories.

"Frank was a member of Phi Delta Theta, but his brother was in Phi Kappa Psi," Flick said.

Frank "came over one night and shot himself in the formal room," he said.

Now Frank haunts the house, mostly flickering the lights at night.

Phi Psi also boasts another ghost, a little girl who was killed in front of the house.

"In the 19th century, a little girl was bouncing her ball, chased it out into Providence Road and was run over by a carriage," Flick said. "Apparently, she crawled all the way up our driveway and died on the south side of the house. Some people say you can still hear her ball bouncing at night and other people have sworn they have seen her."

Although these stories are fun to tell, Flick said few people in the house actually believe them.

"They're more of tall tales; no one really believes in it," Flick said. "One person says he does just to scare people, but the Frank story is really more of justification for crazy electrical problems since it's such an old house."

TOILET SEAT BENEFIT

CINCINNATI – On Saturday, the men of Beta Theta Pi at the University of Cincinnati will carry out their annual non-profit philanthropic venture – the Psychedelic Toilet Sale.

The Betas will deliver cleaned-up and decorated toilets in and around the Cincinnati area from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m., raising money for the Literacy Center West, a Price Hill organization for improving literacy in the area.

Beta member Adam Hildebrand, a fourth-year marketing student, first coordinated the toilet sale three years ago when he was looking for an interesting way to get Beta involved in the community.

The sale was a success from the start, initially earning $2,000 for the Literacy Center.

This year, Hildebrand said Beta expects to earn $3,500.

The purchaser of the toilet chooses a third party to "dump on," and Beta will drop the toilet in the person's front lawn, fraternity members said.

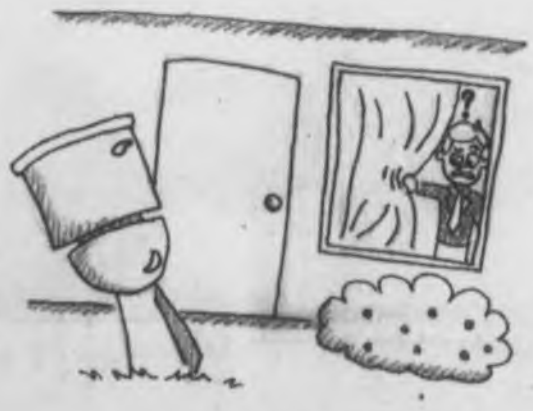
If someone gets dumped on and doesn't want the gift, $10 can be paid to have the toilet removed and pass it on to someone else.

Paying an additional $15 for "toilet insurance" ensures that the toilet will not be returned, said Jason Steinhauer, a third-year operations management student.

At 4 p.m., the dumping ends and all proceeds are collected and sent to the Literacy Center.

Beta members said they chose to help the center, run by Jason Hecker, a Beta alumnus, because they are impressed by the aid it provides to Price Hill area residents.

The organization helps illiterate residents and assists older community members gain their general education development diploma.



Beside the Psychedelic Toilet Sale, members of the fraternity volunteer at the center, tutoring its clients and helping with the general maintenance of the facility.

"I'm just really proud of those guys. They put a lot of work into their chapter and the toilet sale, and it helps us at the Literacy Center so much," Hecker said. "It makes me really proud to be a UC and Beta alumni."

The Beta members who volunteer at the center find the experience rewarding, fraternity members said.

"Volunteering encourages brotherhood with each other, and it's fun," said Emanuel Werner, Beta president and third-year health science student. "Promoting friendship is very important, not just between brothers, but with the community as well."

If you wake up to find a brightly painted toilet in your lawn Saturday morning, remind yourself that it is not always so bad to be dumped on.

Candidates spend most on shirts

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

T-shirts are both the biggest cost and biggest contributors for candidates.

Students buy T-shirts from candidates to support their campaign.

Presidential candidate Andrew Treaster said it helps in two ways, by getting student contributions and spreading the word.

"T-shirts are the best way to get donations from students," he said. "You want as many donations as possible."

Treaster spent $1,519.19 on T-shirts. He and running mate David Hart bought 205 T-shirts from Pfiefley's and had them screen printed at Ballard Sporting Goods. They spent $2,576.94 on their campaign.

Presidential candidate pairs Michael Burns and Grant Groene, and Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner, also purchased T-shirts for their campaign.

Candidate pair Bill Schmit and Jack Holtzen didn't buy T-shirts.

Schmit said they began their campaign later, so they weren't able to buy T-shirts.

"We got into it pretty late," he said. "With our limited time and how far behind we already were, we knew we were already at a disadvantage."

Schmit and Holtzen spent $95.82 on their campaign out of their own contributions.

Money went towards 50 postings and sidewalk chalk.

Burns and Groene spent $1,581.50 for 300 T-shirts from Sportswear Graphics, which is out of Texas. They spent $2,4436.59 on their campaign.

Moore and Wagner spent the most with $1,644.50 for 250 T-shirts at GTM Sportswear. They spent $2,666.86 overall.

Before 2001, there was a $3,000 cap on total campaign expenses.

Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator with the Office of Student Activities and Services, said the cap used to change.

"It was always that way for the long time but they changed the amount so often," he said.

"It changed from year to year."

Part of the reason the cap was eliminated because it limits student contributions, Harlan said.

"The main philosophy was, if you have thousands of students supporting you, you should be able to spend that money," he said. "There's usually a correlation for how many people give support to your group and how many people vote for you."

Bill Muir, faculty representative for Student Senate, said the current rules were slow to come about, but they work well now.

There is a $800 limit on personal contributions and a $20 limit per person.

"It's been a slow progressive process to get to where we are now," he said.

Moore said it forces candidates reach out.

"I think the system we have now allows more of a student voice," he said. "It encourages candidates to interact with other students, so they can get a feel for what the presidency would be like."

Burns said running the presidential race is different than running for a Senate position.

The campaign is directed to all students, instead of just your college.

"I think what's important is remembering as a senate candidate you are trying to get your message to your constituents," he said.

"As a presidential candidate, you have to carry your message to all the students."

Eating disorders difficult to understand

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Losing a few pounds may seem innocent, but when it becomes an obsession it can be deadly.

Jennifer, whose name has been changed upon request, said she came to college and quickly gained weight after leaving sports in high school. Jennifer began exercising and ended up taking matters into her own hands.

"I basically wanted to lose weight every day," Jennifer said. "The scale – it determined how my day was going to be.

"My hair was falling out and I counted calories and all that," she said.

"I created an environment where I could eat what I wanted. I remember eating a piece of celery with cream cheese on it for dinner once."

Jennifer's boyfriend gave her an incentive and told her he would give her $15 for every pound she gained.

Jennifer said this helped, but the problem wasn't just about weight.

"After I gained weight back, I became bulimic," Jennifer said. "I was bloated, depressed and uncomfortable with my body. It was like my body was still hungry from when I starved it and all it wanted was to be full."

Jennifer said that much of her struggle with bulimia, cycles of binge eating and purging, stemmed from her lack of recovery from her self-starvation, called anorexia nervosa.

"I failed to recover the right way," she said. "I gained weight but not the confidence."

Eating disorders such as anorexia nervosa, bulimia nervosa and binge eating are characterized by attitudes, emotions and strongly altered life choices dealing with weight and food issues.

These behaviors can include excessive dieting and exercise.

Dianna Schalles, Lafene nutritionist, said eating disorders are often hard to understand.

"These behaviors have become coping tools," Schalles said.

"I give the analogy of a life preserver. You can't just ask that person to give it up right away."

Kim Moir, counselor at Cornerstone Family Counseling Center, said several clients find controlling their weight rewarding.

"One girl said to me, 'This is one area in my life I can be successful at,' " Moir said.

The cause of an eating disorder can be as perplexing as the disorder itself.

The reasons include past weight problems, perfectionism and stress.

"I talked to one girl who was struggling with her parents' separation and a stressful class and before she knew it, she couldn't eat because of stress.

"It blossomed to, 'I'm not going to eat,' " Moir said.

Finding a physician or a counselor is the first step on the road to recovery.

Moir said she first helps them find the root of the problem.

"They began to believe some lies. We have to bring those lies into the light and give the truth," Moir said.

"I'm a Christian counselor, and I encourage seeing yourself as God sees you."

Do you have a problem?

- Have you gained more then 15 pounds in the last three months?
- Do you think you are fat but your friends tell you that you are too thin?
- When you look in the mirror, do you see yourself as fat?
- Do you sometimes eat to the point of feeling ill?
- To get help, call Lafene Health Center at 532-6544.

Commission eliminates $5 recreation charge

By Cynthia Hoffman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The $5 Manhattan Parks and Recreation nonresident fee was revoked Tuesday at the City Commission meeting.

The fee was charged to participate in recreation programs.

Terry DeWeese, director of Parks and Recreation, said he strongly recommended the nonresident fee be dropped because the negative response outweighed the monetary benefits.

"From our standpoint, the small amount of money we are making from the nonresident fee isn't worth the general discontent we are receiving from the people," he said.

The nonresident fee was approved by commission in October of 2003 against the wishes of the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board.

Upon the approval, the advisory board asked the city administration to report back with the participant numbers and dollars generated one year after the nonresident fee had been implemented.

The report showed that in 2003, there were 926 nonresidents that participated in recreation programs.

In 2004, when the nonresident fee was in effect, there were 498 nonresidents that participated in recreation programs.

Commissioner Mark Taussig said he was in favor of the fee and didn't think the results could be accurate within the time allowed.

"Initially the commission thought it would be equitable to charge non-residents, and I still think it's a good idea," he said. "One year isn't a fair amount of time to have adequate information."

According to the report, the non-resident fee generated an additional $2,490. But the loss of 428 participants from 2003 to 2004 yielded a loss of $17,945 in overall revenue.

Mayor Brad Everett said these statistics proved the nonresident fee wasn't having a positive effect because money was lost.

Commissioner Bruce Snead agreed with Everett.

"Based on the decline in participants, the loss of money, and the feedback complaints we've had, it's clear the fee isn't a good idea," he said.

However, not all the commissioners agreed that the reported results were clear. Commissioner Ed Klimek said he had a difficult time finding a trend in the results.

"I can't make a trend out of one year with conflicting figures," he said.

"We don't know if it's the nonresident fee that's solely responsible for the decline in participation.

"It could have been caused by the increase in regular recreation fees."

Despite the conflicting views, the motion to revoke the nonresident fee was approved 3-2.

TO THE POINT

Research a must before applying for credit cards

Credit card companies offer many attractive incentives to students who fill out applications and open accounts.

T-shirts, coupons, frequent flyer miles and other benefits are all used to entice students to apply.

What many students may not know, and what credit card companies will not explain, is how credit works and how it can affect students in the future.

Variable interest rates, hidden annual fees and minimum monthly payments are all ways credit card companies make money.

These fees can not only make it next to impossible for students to pay off the balance on a single credit card, but can also damage a person's credit report beyond repair.

Credit card debt and student loans can make it difficult for students to buy a car or put a down payment on a house after graduation.

Credit card companies are getting rich thanks to students' ignorance of how credit works.

Before students fill out a credit card application at that table on campus or apply for instant approval to receive 10 percent off their purchase.

They should take some time to educate themselves about the proper use and the dangers of credit cards.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

North Korean nukes

Put diplomacy first; America should talk with Kim Jong Il

DAVID LIANG

The current nuclear crisis can be traced back several decades, with the first attempt at any sort of resolution in 1994 when President Clinton laid down the "Agreed Framework" with North Korea.

The deal included, among other things, the lifting of economic sanctions and the construction of two light-water reactors incapable of producing weapons-grade plutonium to help meet the impoverished nation's energy needs. In return, Pyongyang promised to freeze and eventually dismantle its nuclear program.

Unfortunately, the deal was as good as dead before anyone realized it. Believing that the North was facing imminent collapse, Clinton never had any intention of fulfilling his side of the bargain. Construction of the reactors was delayed again and again (it took Kedo, the consortium in charge of the project, six years to pour the foundation), fuel shipments were chronically late and sanctions remained in place.

Then in January 2002, tensions flared when George Bush labeled North Korea as part of the infamous "axis of evil." By all counts, Bush's accusation was probably justified. But in the world of international politics, a leader always treads a fine line between provocative rhetoric and angry backlash.

Bush's speech crossed that line. In response, North Korea fired back in its typical paranoid, hysterical manner. Later that year, it reactivated nuclear facilities at Yongbyon, expelled U.N. nuclear inspectors and withdrew from the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty.

Several attempts at multilateral talks were made, with none of them especially conclusive. And therein lies the problem with the six-party talks: there is too much bureaucracy and too little dialogue. The other four countries involved have radically different interests.

China just wants the whole thing over with. Japan wants its abducted citizens back. South Korea is hoping for reunification, and Russia doesn't care all that much.

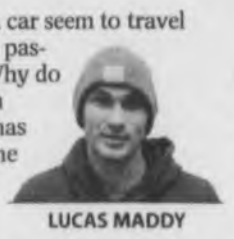
But in the end, Kim Jong Il is only concerned with one party – the United States. Kim's immediate goal is the survival of his regime, and he has shown that he will go to great lengths – the starvation of millions of his own people, to be precise – to do it.

While some may view Bush's unwillingness to negotiate with a tyrant as a virtue, one has to look at the current situation with a certain amount of pragmatism.

Each day America holds out on diplomacy is a day closer to a second Korean War. North Korea may be one of very poorest countries in the world, but it also happens to have one of the largest militaries.

With thousands of artillery pieces pointed squarely at Seoul, the civilian casualty count, should war erupt, would be in the hundreds of thousands. That's not factoring in the nukes they now claim to have.

Right now, the United States can do one of two things: continue to isolate North Korea and run the risk of it building more nukes (and potentially selling them to the highest bidder), or bring North Korea back to the negotiating table and have its bombs destroyed in a verifiable manner in return for economic aid and oil.



Strategic military strikes would be much less effective at this point since nobody knows where the nukes are kept and processed plutonium can be stored anywhere from the Yongbyon processing plant to Kim Jong Il's bedroom.

There's no panacea for the North Korean crisis, and more bravado is only going to worsen things. The sooner America starts conducting dialogue face-to-face with North Korea, the better our chances of diffusing the crisis peacefully.

It's not going to be a great deal by any standards, but it's the only one that America's going to get without resorting to war.

United States should keep control, bring Asian nations to negotiations

LUCAS MADDY

Why does a car seem to travel faster from the passenger seat? Why do we fidget when someone else has the remote? The answer, my liberal counterpart, is control.

Giving up control might mean a more stressful car ride or that we suffer through watching "The Real World." As Americans, we take control of situations when countries like North Korea are bucking for a fight.

Are we cramping their style by demanding six-party negotiations for absolving nuclear issues? Yes, because if an opening were to present itself, North Korea would put us down.

The following quote from the People's Daily, a Chinese news organization, gives an idea as to the intentions of North Korea: "The embassy of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea in Moscow said Thursday that Pyongyang has to maintain its nuclear deterrents facing Washington's certain activities, confirming that it would not freeze the nuclear activities unconditionally."

Granted, I lack the ability to read between the lines, but even I read "has to maintain its nuclear deterrents" as less than warm and fuzzy.

The possibility that North Korea is merely misunderstood is absurdly miniscule. On April 24, 2003, North Korea openly admitted to possessing nuclear weapons, a direct violation of the "Agreed Framework" signed by the United States and North Korea in 1994. In it, North Korea promised to "freeze its existing nuclear program...[and] work together [with the United States] for peace and security on a nuclear-free Korean peninsula."

Developing, and subsequently firing, nukes– though "freeing" the peninsula of such a detrimental commodity – is nowhere close to what the "Agreed Framework" had in mind.

In August 1998, the Koreans fired a missile broadcasting nationalist hymns honoring their war leaders. This would have been fine had the rocket not proceeded to fly by the Japanese island of Honshu before splashing off the Japanese coast.

A weapon considered accurate if it hits the right continent could be pointed directly at Mount Fuji. If North Korea decides to hit Japan, America will feel obliged to intervene.

We would rather not go to war with a communist country, especially given the past interaction between North Korea and the Soviet Union. While the USSR is no more, its nukes could be floating around on the black market. If a U.S.-Japanese-North Korean war begins, it could suck in every Asian country worth its weight in rice.

Even if you lack the brains to tie your shoes, this next bit should sink in: Nukes in North Korea equals pushy North Korea equals scared Japan equals nukes in Japan equals large smear where the Far East used to be plus Astrodome-sized craters dotting North America.

Keeping nuclear weapons out of North Korea is a concern for all six countries involved in the negotiations. To remove any affected country from these talks would cripple what progress has been made.

Should Bush talk one-on-one with Kim Jong Il? Bush may be a strong leader, but G-Dub himself seldom understands what is leaving his yapper. How will North Korea get the gist?

Allowing further nuclear proliferation, especially by a country in direct violation of an agreement made in good faith, is like inviting the Russians over for a quick game of roulette. The United States needs to stand firm, bring all players to the negotiating table and make sure that Kim Jong Il is playing by our rules, not demanding his own.

Manhattan resident specializes in rare orchid collection

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of the payoffs for growing rare plants is nurturing something most people will never see.

For a hobby that is generally pursued on one of the coasts, Manhattan resident and local grower Philip Crabb said his collection of orchids and Stag Horn Ferns is something rare – especially in the Midwest.

Crabb doesn't have a greenhouse, something he said frustrates him.

But he has made do by refitting a storage area in the Konza Veterinary Clinic into a light gardening area for his 250 ferns and orchids.

"It's sort of a warehouse area with dog food and stuff on the shelves," Crabb said.

"But it has 12-foot ceilings, which is good for the wire walls, and you can hang the lights up high and that makes for a huge hanging area for a lot of plants."

The Stag Horn fern, the kind Crabb has concentrated on growing, is known as an epiphyte fern, which is a fern that grows on another plant, generally trees, but isn't a parasite, Crabb said.

He said the fern uses its roots to cling to the host plant, but the nutrients it receives are from the air.

Crabb has been working with plants since 1979, when he started working with orchids in California.

Another rewarding aspect of nurturing rare plants is the daily, consistent care, Crabb said.

Crabb, who is also a painter and wallpaper hanger, said it's nice to separate from his work life of toxic paint and immerse himself in the natural relationship he has with the plants.

He said the pleasure of caring for the plants can sometimes be a two-sided coin.

He said sometimes the pleasure can be eclipsed by the gentle, meticulous nature the plants need.

"There has to be the right amount of consistent care. I don't have a greenhouse where I can just douse water over 250 plants and be done in 20 minutes," Crabb said. "I'm burdened by water management and having to care for every single plant."

Dr. Deb Mangelsdorf, owner and veterinarian for the Konza Veterinary Clinic, said she met Crabb when he was having trouble with his dog.

"It was the middle of the night and he thought his dog was about to pass away," Mangelsdorf said. "When you're in a situation like that, spending time with someone overcome with so much stress, we chatted a bit.

"I think we put on a pot of coffee and he told me about his fern collection."

Mangelsdorf said her father was into horticulture and some of it rubbed off on her. She said eventually Crabb needed space for his collection and she had space to lend.

"So he used it (the space), and it's been great," Mangelsdorf said.

"Sometimes, it's a good diversion for someone who may be distraught or upset.

"It's nice to walk into this virtual jungle. It's so peaceful, it's a stately experience," she said.

Having the collection near is nice for clients, but Mangelsdorf said she really enjoys the plants.

She said anyone can stop by to see the collection, but it's not really set up as an exhibit.

Crabb said he doesn't know how big his collection will get, but he definitely wants more space and a greenhouse.

Crabb said he'd eventually like to have a plant shop that would specialize in rare plants.

He said even though he doesn't have a greenhouse, he doesn't have to worry about not having a nice day.

"Basically every day is a summer day for my plants," Crabb said.

"I don't have to worry about a cloudy week, which can cause plants in a greenhouse to grow irregularly."

Crabb said that the relationship he has with Mangelsdorf is a good one since both enjoy Crabb's hobby.

"When I had a road trip from California with a van full of plants, she said I could hang them up here," Crabb said.

"I always tell her that I'm going to get a box of this or that and she'll say: 'No more plants!' But in reality, it's a harmonious cooperation."

Grad students to address legislators

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Topeka legislators will get a visit from 15 K-State graduate students today.

The students, along with 15 students from the University of Kansas and five students from Wichita State University, will present their research with hopes to gain attention from legislators, Bala Thiagarajan, president-elect of the K-State graduate student council, said.

"They are showing them there are a lot of things done for Kansas by graduate students," Thiagarajan, graduate student in biology, said.

Russell Yarnell, graduate student in biological and agricultural engineering, will present his research, "Determining nitrogen and phosphorus losses from urban lawns."

Yarnell said the research focuses on the effects of fertilizer.

"It looks at if you fertilize a lawn, how the moisture level in the soil affects the nitrogen and phosphorus level in the runoff," he said.

Yarnell said the most important part of the summit is showing legislators the importance of higher education.

"It's good to let them know we are actually out there, we are working on things," he said.

"We are actually generating results, we are looking at different ways to do things."

The students will have tables set up from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on the second floor of the Capitol Building's rotunda.

Their research will be presented on posters and they will be explaining their projects to interested passersby.

Women's golf finishes 12th at Texas A&M

Freshman leads Wildcats with 21st-place finish

By Ben Fallin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's women's golf team finished 12th at the Texas A&M Mo'Morial, a disappointing result considering the Wildcats won the event last year in a playoff over Missouri.

Freshmen Kali Quick led K-State in the tournament, finishing in a tie for 21st with a score of 240.

During the two-day event, K-State as a team shot 328-326-332 over three rounds for a combined score of 986. K-State was in 13th place heading into the final round on Tuesday. The Wildcats did just enough to hold off Kansas and finished 6 strokes better than the Jayhawks, who finished 14th.

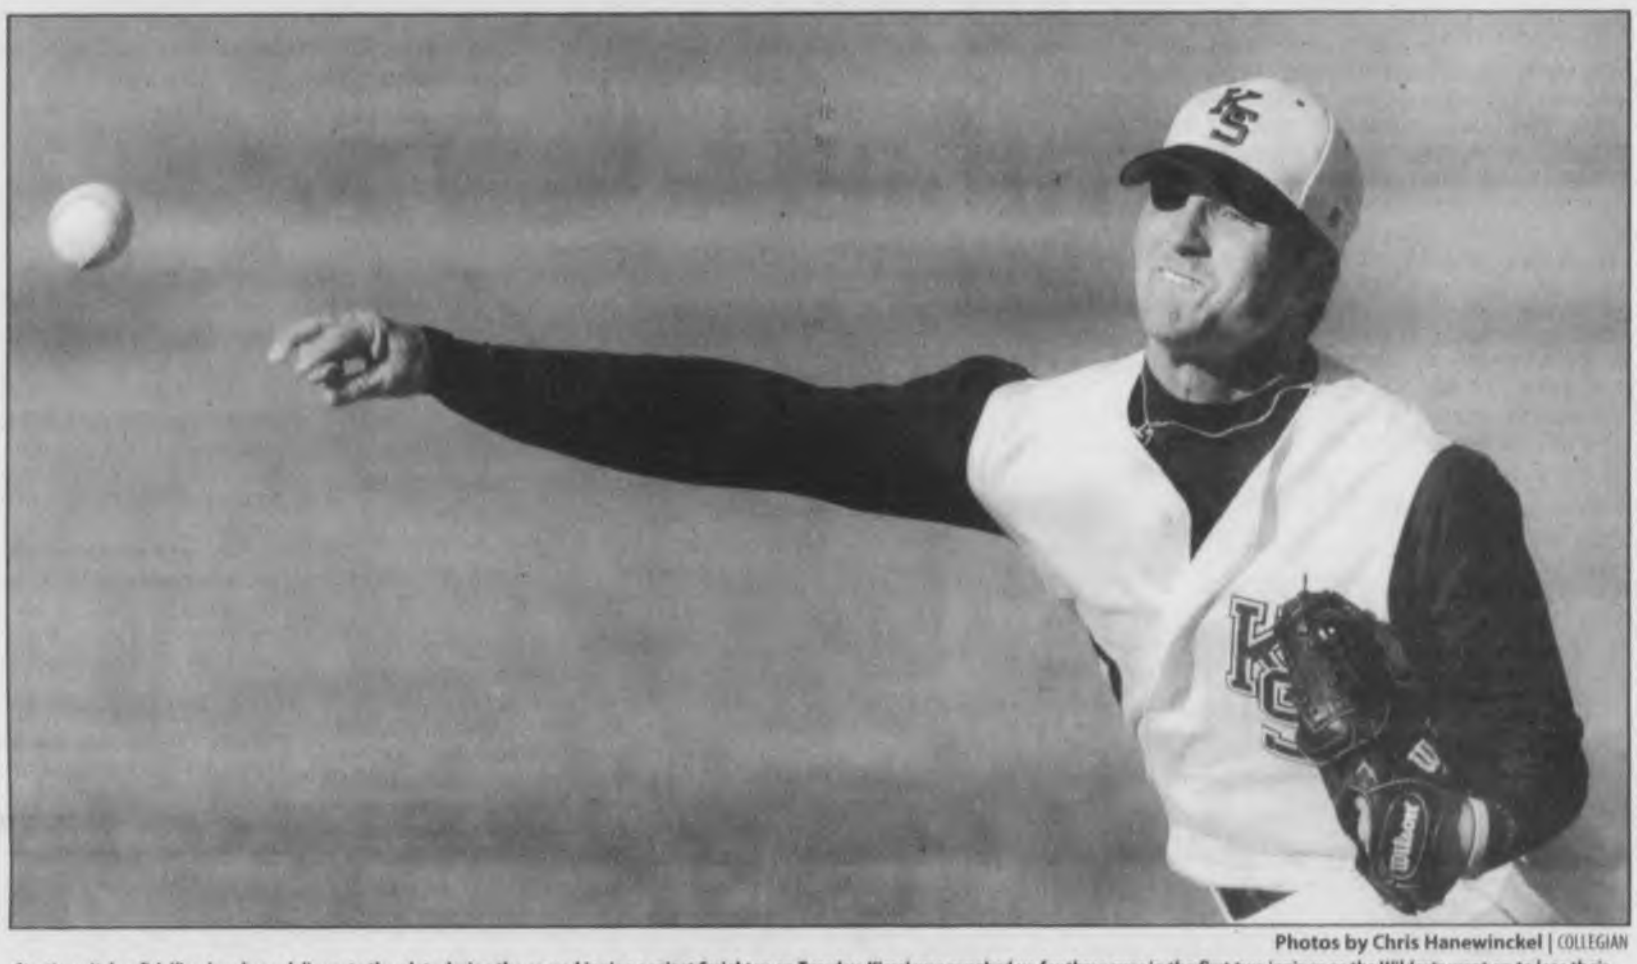
Quick said she felt the team is coming around and soon its game will too. She also said she is under-performing so far this season.

"I did OK," Quick said of her performance at the Mo'Morial. "I struggled a lot here and there. I was pretty disappointed with myself. I know that I can do better. It's a good learning experience."

Head Coach Kristi Knight had a differing opinion about Quick's performance.

"(Monday), Kali came off the course thinking she played poorly," Knight said. "I told her a 78 and 79 were very competitive and she was in a good position. She is just so competitive and is such a battler. Unfortunately, that can come back to bite her sometimes because she can play too aggressive."

Southern Methodist won the team title with a score of 942. Samantha Richdale, a junior at Illinois State, took home the individual title with a three-round score of 230.



The Big 12's top team in the event was the host team, Texas A&M. They also produced the Big 12's top individual in the Mo'Morial, as Kyla Neal finished tied for fourth place with a score of 233.

K-State's five athletes all finished in the top 80 individually. Behind Quick, Helene Robert tied for 38th, scoring 245; Sarah Heffel tied for 52nd with a three-round total of 249; Katy Heffel took home 58th, while scoring 252 and rounding out the field of Wildcats was Stephanie Limoges at 78th with a score of 264.

Knight said she isn't pleased with the way K-State performed during the event. She said she feels her team can and will play better.

"We have to play better," Knight said. "We should not be a back of the pack team. If we can improve our ball striking and a few other things, we will be a lot better."

Lack of teamwork

Starting pitcher B.J. Kissel makes a delivery to the plate during the second inning against Creighton on Tuesday. Kissel was roughed up for three runs in the first two innings as the Wildcats went on to lose their home opener, 8-3.

Cats' offense struggles in baseball home opener

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The sun, along with 402 fans, came out for the K-State baseball home opener Tuesday, but the Wildcats' offense forgot to show up, as K-State lost to Creighton 8-3.

"We didn't do a good job adjusting," Coach Brad Hill said. "We should've taken a lesson from them – they don't try and do too much. They're a good team."

The Bluejays (7-2), took control of the game from the very beginning, capitalizing off junior B.J. Kissel's inconsistent pitching, jumping ahead 3-0 by the end of the second inning.

"We didn't want to get down that quick and that early, but B.J. wasn't sharp," Hill said. "It was B.J.'s first start, and I expected a little more, but I'm not displeased."

Freshman Chase Bayuk relieved Kissel (0-1) in the fourth inning, only to allow three more runs, increasing the Bluejay margin to 6-0.

In the bottom of the fifth, K-State turned its offense around, scoring three runs.

The rally was fueled by junior David Baker's double. Senior Josh Dent batted Baker home with a single.

Senior Terry Blunt continued the rally by nabbing a double and moving Dent to third. Junior Brandon Farr completed the inning with two RBI's, batting Dent and Blunt in.

Farr, a transfer from Blinn Junior College in Humble, Tex., contributed significantly to the offense, with two RBI's, in his first home game as a Wildcat.

Although pleased with his performance, Farr said it is hard to be excited since K-State lost.

"It feels good to help," Farr said, "But at the same time, it feels spoiled because we didn't get a win."

Hill said Farr is the only player igniting the Wildcats' offense.

"Farr is the one guy helping us in the line up," Hill said. "I'm not sure anyone else is right now."

After the three-run fifth, K-State's offense went cold again, and the Wildcats were unable to carry the momentum into the next four innings.

"The guys got more focused (in the fifth inning), but it's all about momentum swings," Hill said. "We had a couple of good bats, but fell apart after that. I'm disappointed we could not have scored more runs."

Freshman Brad Hutt and junior Bryan Peterson pitched the final four innings of the game, but could not contest Creighton's relief pitcher, Scott Reese, and his six strike outs.

In the seventh inning, the momentum swung back in the Bluejays' favor, with Hutt giving up a two-run homer, solidifying an 8-3 Creighton victory.

Overall, Hill said he was disappointed with K-State's inability to play as a team.

"We've got to be more team-oriented," Hill said. "We need more guys in the lineup."

Farr agreed with Hill's sentiments, saying the lack of team cohesion was K-State's ultimate downfall.

"Right now there is a lot of individual play," Farr said. "We need to play as a team."

Left fielder Terry Blunt tries to throw out a Creighton runner at the plate during the first inning Tuesday. The Wildcats fell to Creighton 8-3, but will be back in action against St. Francis at 3 p.m. Friday.

Senior trio sets standard for future Wildcat players

Women's basketball has never interested me.

If I had a choice between watching NASCAR, poker or women's basketball, I would probably read a magazine.

ANTHONY MENDOZA

That is until three players made me a fan of the women's game with their teamwork, fundamentals and all-out effort every night.

Those three players are K-State seniors Laurie Koehn, Megan Mahoney and Kendra Wecker.

The trio will take the court in Columbia, Mo., tonight for its final regular-season conference game of its brilliant career.

Between the three of them, they hold six K-State records, and Wecker is only 39 points shy of passing Nicole Ohlde to become the career scoring leader in Wildcat history with a minimum of three games remaining in the season.

Coming from Santa Ana Junior College in Santa Ana, Calif., I have had a whole new experience here in Manhattan.

No longer do I need a cup of coffee before the game, an energy drink at halftime and another caffeinated drink during the middle of the second half just to get through a 65-24 game.

K-State did have its share of laughers during the season, but the difference was that they were exciting. There was always the chance that Wecker would spin off a defender and made a 15-foot jump shot, Koehn would knock down a 3-pointer five feet behind the arc or Mahoney would dish out a no-look pass in transition.

I'll admit I was not prepared for the first game I covered this year when K-State matched up with Athletes in Action in its second exhibition game of the season.

Arriving early with my coworker, we sat down and watched as the players warmed up, and I hurriedly flipped through the media guide and pre-game notes.

Turning to my partner I noticed one player on the court by herself and I said, "She hasn't missed a three-point shot yet."

His answer was, "That's Laurie Koehn."

That was all I needed to know.

From that day, I was hooked. Watching these three players up close was special, and dealing with them after the game was an even better experience.

No matter how much I stumbled over my words, the answers they gave me always made sense, even though my original question might not have.

K-State is losing three of its best players at one time, and how the program responds from this is yet to be determined.

Not one player will be able to fill the role of Kendra Wecker, Megan Mahoney and Laurie Koehn. They will be the new standard by which future Wildcat players will be measured.

It is a goal that all future players should try to reach.

NBA | Mourning signs deal to return to Miami Heat

MIAMI — Alonzo Mourning and the Miami Heat are finally together again.

Mourning signed a contract Tuesday and practiced with the team in Miami, where he spent eight seasons — a stint twice interrupted by kidney disease. He's expected to make about $325,000 for the rest of the season, based on a prorated share of the $1.1 million minimum veteran contract.

Mourning

Mourning may be in uniform Thursday when Miami visits New Jersey. He averaged 10.4 points and 7.1 rebounds in 18 games for the Nets earlier this season.

To clear space for the seven-time All-Star, Miami waived forward Wesley Person, who played only 27 minutes since Dec. 4 and was displeased with his diminished role.

MLB | New drug testing to begin Thursday

NEW YORK — Testing under baseball's new drug agreement will start Thursday, according to the commissioner's office.

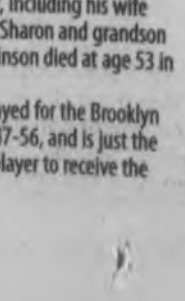
Lawyers for players and owners have been drafting the deal since they announced the agreement for tougher testing on Jan. 13.

Michael Weiner, the union's general counsel, said the sides hoped to complete the drafting before the testing starts. The deal replaces the agreement that began in September 2002.

Under the new rules, players would be suspended for 10 days for a first positive test for a performance-enhancing drug, 30 days for a second positive test, 60 days for a third and one year for a fourth. Under the previous deal, a player who tested positive for the first time received counseling, and his name was not publicly revealed.

CBB | Chaney will not coach in A-10 tournament

PHILADELPHIA — John Chaney extended his own suspension by banning himself from the Temple sidelines for the Atlantic 10 tournament.



Chaney

The Hall of Famer continued a week of apologies and punishments Monday when he announced he won't return after the school's three-game suspension ends with the close of the regular season.

Chaney first suspended himself for one game and then had the school extend it to three games over his ordering rough play from one of his players in a recent game that resulted in an injury to senior John Bryant of Saint Joseph's.

NFL | Bucs safety Smith charged with assault

TAMPA, Fla. — Tampa Bay Buccaneers safety Dwight Smith was arrested Tuesday and charged with aggravated assault with a weapon.

Smith

According to the Hillsborough County sheriff's office, Smith pulled a pellet gun on two men who approached his car while he waited on line at a McDonald's drive-through. Smith pointed the gun at the two men who walked up to his car, but did not shoot.

A passenger in Smith's car then punched one of the men and was charged with battery, according to police.

MLB | Jackie Robinson to be honored with gold medal

LOS ANGELES — Jackie Robinson, who was baseball's first black player in 1947 and a pioneer in the nation's civil rights movement, will be awarded the Congressional gold medal at the United States Capitol Building in Washington on Wednesday.

President George W. Bush will make the presentation to members of Robinson's family, including his wife Rachel, daughter Sharon and grandson David. Jackie Robinson died at age 53 in October 1972.

Robinson played for the Brooklyn Dodgers from 1947-56, and is just the second baseball player to receive the honor.

Cornerstone of student food chain easy to find

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The college student food pyramid: Ramen noodles, fast food, beer and pizza. No other food item is as versatile as pizza. It can be used at get–together with friends, as a cheap alternative to cafeteria food or as a delicious snack when one is drunk and has the munchies.

Manhattan has many pizza restaurants that are steeped in tradition. Domino's Pizza is celebrating its 25th anniversary at K-State this year, owner Rick Hernandez said.

"We have a special where you buy a large pizza at menu cost and the second for 25 cents," Hernandez said.

Domino's was the first pizza chain that delivered Hot Wings, beginning in 1981. Domino's also has "Buffalo Chicken Kickers." They are boneless chicken wings made with whole muscle chicken, not pressed meat, Hernandez said.

Gumby's Pizza is another pizza restaurant infused with K-State tradition. Gumby's Pizza is the only parlor in town that has such a large menu that includes pizza (Gumby's is home to the only 20-inch pizza in town), Pokey Sticks, fresh, hot, cold and low-carb subs and eight types of pasta, all of which can be delivered.

"We can deliver anything on the menu," said Doug Macejewski, owner of Gumby's, "except, of course, beer."

Gumby's is locally owned and employs many K-State students. Macejewski works every day.

"Gumby's is a pizza place with attitude. Where else can you go hang out with friends, eat 50-cent pizza sticks, hang out before going to the bars or after the bars close?" Macejewski said.

Gumby's is open until 3 a.m. on weekends.

"We have so much variety, it's almost sickening," Macejewski said.

Students who have lived in Manhattan for any length of time are guaranteed to have the Pizza Shuttle phone number , 776-5577, burned into their brains thanks to catchy radio jingles.

Pizza Shuttle has many year-round specials that are very popular among students: two small pizzas and two fountain drinks for $9.50, two large two-topping pizzas and a two-liter for $15, and one large pizza, cheese bread and a two-liter for $10.25, owner Jeff Duff said.

Pizza Hut is perhaps one of the biggest and best-known pizza chains in Manhattan.

"The Pizza Hut in Aggieville is the fifth Pizza Hut franchise opened," Martin Hemingway, owner of Manhattan Pizza Hut, said. "It is the oldest Pizza Hut to still be in its original location."

The Pizza Hut in Aggieville was opened in October 1960, Hemingway said.

Pizza Hut also offers local favorites that are assembled by employees putting their favorite toppings on a pizza and giving them an original name, Hemingway said.

For instance, the Wildcat Special is a pizza with pepperoni, pork, onions, mushrooms and jalepenos. Bubba's Favorite is also another popular Manhattan original. It contains a spicier sauce, beef, bacon and cheese. After it is cooked, fresh onions and diced tomatoes are added. There is also the Over-Nighter. The pizza contains white sauce, ham, pork, eggs and cheese.

"It doesn't sound very appealing, but the egg and ham come together for a very nice flavor," Hemingway said.

Students will often eat pizza no matter where it is from, but they are very vocal about their favorite pizza in town.

"I like Pizza Hut the best because their sauce doesn't taste weird, but I haven't tried all the pizza places," Alecia Stuchlik, freshman in anthropology, said. "My favorite is a hand-tossed crust with Canadian bacon and hamburger."

Stuchlik said that she likes delivery best because she doesn't usually have pizza delivered when she's at home.

Shana Kaufman, sophomore in family studies and human services, said that her favorite pizza is Gumby's.

"I just like their pizza; I really like the cheese too," she said. "There really isn't any place that I don't like, I just usually order from Gumby's."

Kaufman said that she usually orders pizza on the weekend and prefers delivery, but "the pizza is better when I go sit down and eat it there."

April Heady-Smith, junior in architectural engineering, said she had yet another favorite place to order pizza.

"I like Papa John's the best, especially a mushroom, broccoli and black olive pizza," she said.

However when it comes to a restaurant to go to and eat pizza, nothing beats Gumby's atmosphere, Heady-Smith said.

Pizza has been proven to attract students to any event on (or off) campus, especially if it's free. Nothing quite beats the allure of a freshly baked pizza. Whatever reason for ordering pizza – be it a football party, agreement with a roommate on what to eat for the weekend or a cure for the munchies – just make sure it's clear who gets the last piece.

50 Cent boots The Game from G-Unit clique

NEW YORK — Another day, another feud for 50 Cent. This time, he's beefing with his own protege, the best-selling rapper The Game. Actually, make that former protege.

In an interview on hip-hop radio station Hot 97 Monday night, 50 announced that he was kicking The Game out of his G-Unit clique because of disloyalty — for refusing to take 50's side in his latest battles with high-profile rappers. Then a shooting occurred outside the radio station, wounding one man, police said.

Prosecutor: Lil' Kim lied about shootout

NEW YORK — Grammy-winning hip-hop star Lil' Kim lied to a grand jury about a shootout at a radio station in 2001 to protect her former manager and a friend, a federal prosecutor said Tuesday at her perjury trial.

Lil' Kim, a whose real name is Kimberly Jones, and her assistant "flat-out lied" by testifying that the manager was not at the station during the fight, in which one man was wounded, prosecutor Daniel Gitner said in opening statements.

Fox wins February ratings sweeps

NEW YORK — February ended with double milestones in television: the first-ever sweeps month victory among all viewers for Fox, and the first-ever fourth-place finish for once mighty NBC. Sweeps are held four months a year, when Nielsen Media Research ratings are closely watched to set local advertising rates.

The rankings are set even though the current sweeps period runs through Wednesday. Fox will also win among the 18-to-49-year-old age demographic that advertisers pay a premium to reach.

Fox's first sweeps month win since the network began prime-time broadcasting in 1987 is slightly deceptive. Take the Super Bowl out of the equation, and Fox would finish third behind CBS and ABC, Nielsen said.

The marriage was officially terminated as of Tuesday, according to the document. The couple have no children.

Man ordered to stay away from Halle Berry

A judge issued a three-year restraining order against a man who allegedly sent threatening letters to Halle Berry's home.

Superior Court Judge Linda K. Lefkowitz ruled that Robert Sawyer of San Pablo, about 15 miles northeast of San Francisco, was to stay 100 yards away from Berry and to keep the same distance from her home, work and vehicle.

The order, which expires in 2008, also prohibits him from contacting the actress by phone, mail or e-mail.

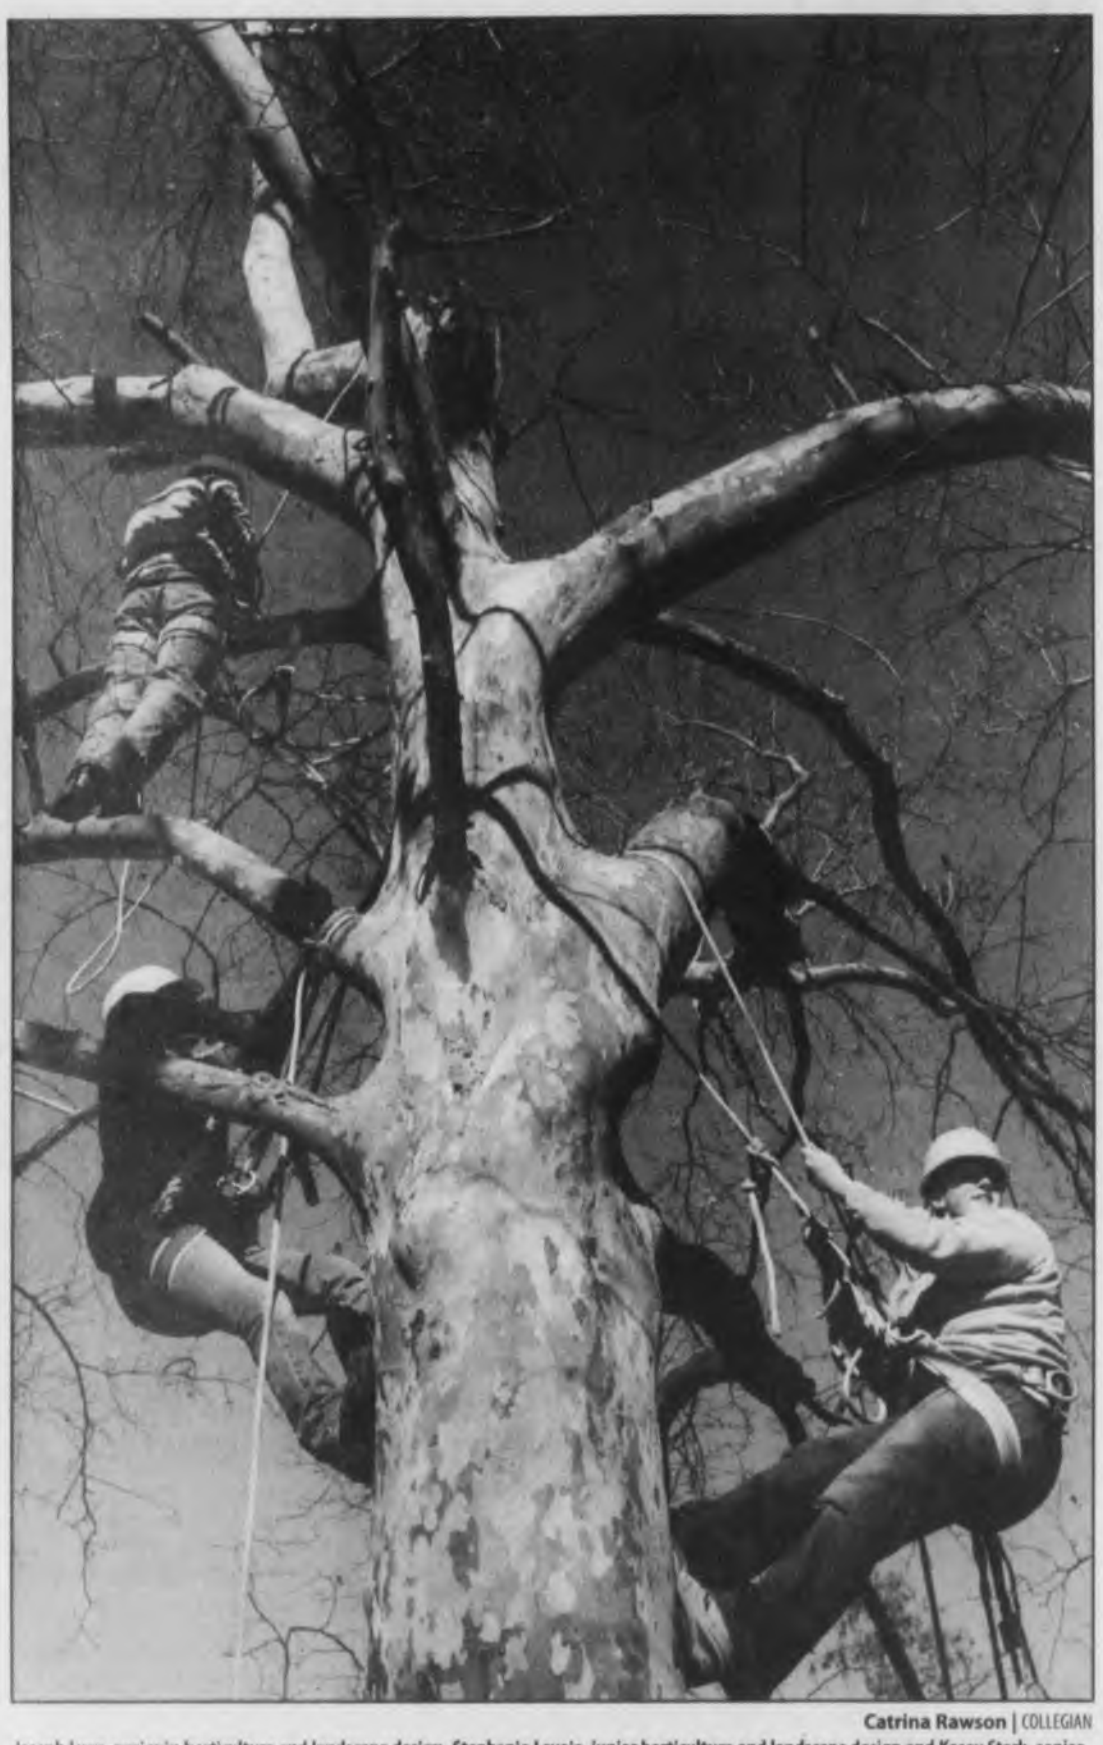
Fashion trends differ greatly; students must find own style

ASK THE 5th YEAR

ADAM AKIN

Q: My friend tends to jump on every fashion trend she hears about. She buys an enormous amount of clothes. Should I tell her that she needs to find her own identity or should I just leave things be?



A: I will admit that I am in no way a fashion expert, but that sure as hell won't keep me from saying what's on my mind.

The subject of fashion trends is difficult to address, due to the fact that trends differ in so many ways. My views on different styles vary drastically. Let me give a few examples. The low rise jeans that girls everywhere have taken to are awesome. I can't even begin to explain how much I enjoy that style. The flipped up collar on guys, on the other hand, is just ridiculous. Side note: I actually heard a rumor that the flipped up collar trend was started by homosexuals who used the fad to identify each other in public. I don't know if this is true or not; it's just what I heard.

I haven't quite yet decided how I feel about the Ugg boots. I know that they aren't particularly sexy, but I can't say that they are unattractive because they look really comfortable and I kind of wish that I could get away with wearing them. One thing that I do know is that the mustache is making a huge comeback. I actually like this trend. I can't really explain why, but mustaches are just funny to me.

As far as your problem with your friend goes, I say just let her keep buying the latest fashions as long as she as the money to do so. If she does have as much clothing as you say she does, it should be really easy for you to "borrow" stuff from her without her noticing. And since she will have almost everything you could ever want, it will be easy for you.

Spanish architect to give lecture today in Forum Hall

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Idea, gravity and light are all aspects that help form Alberto Campo Baeza's architecture work.

Campo Baeza will present the Oscar Ekdahl Memorial Lecture for the K-State College of Architecture.

His lecture will be at 4 p.m. today in Forum Hall of the K-State Student Union and is entitled "The Built Idea."

Campo Baeza is the head of the Technical School of Architecture in Madrid, Spain, where he graduated from in 1971.

He has been a leader in the resurgence of Spanish influence in architecture, both as an educator and as a practicing architect.

"I think his reputation is growing very rapidly," said David Sachs, head of the Department of Architecture.

Diane Potts, assistant to the dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, said Campo Baeza will be discussing some of his work in a slide-illustrated lecture.

"Architecture in Spain lives up to the highest standard of any country today," Sachs said.

"I would hope that Mr. Campo Baeza could help us understand how we could raise the stature of architecture in this country."

Sachs said that students should come to the lecture to see examples of beautifully conceived and crafted architecture.

"Architecture students should come to learn more about a preeminent educator and practicing architect," Potts said.

The lecture is free and open to the public.

Suspected BTK killer charged

Rader faces 10 counts of 1st-degree murder

By David Twiddy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dennis Rader, the churchgoing family man and Cub Scout leader accused of leading a double life as the BTK serial killer, was charged Tuesday with 10 counts of first-degree murder.

Rader made his first court appearance by videoconference from his jail cell. During the brief hearing, Rader stood behind a podium, his hands folded at times, at others leafing through a copy of the charges against him.

He told the judge that he is married and was employed with the city of Park City, and said "Thank you, sir" at the end of the hearing.

About a dozen family members of victims were in the courtroom, but they did not speak to reporters. Rader was accompanied by a temporary attorney, and the judge appointed the state's public defender office to represent him.

The BTK killer, whose nickname stands for "Bind, Torture, Kill," was suspected of eight deaths beginning in 1974, but authorities said they had linked two additional victims to the serial killer.

It appears unlikely Rader will face the death penalty. He has yet to be charged with a slaying that occurred after 1994, when Kansas passed its capital punishment law.

Additionally, the Kansas Supreme Court ruled that law unconstitutional in December over a provision on how juries weigh evidence for and against execution.

Authorities have declined to say what led them to the 59-year-old Rader, a married father of two, scout leader and active member of a Lutheran church.

However, there were indications a computer disk BTK sent to the television station KSAS provided a key piece of evidence that led police to Rader.

Scott Robertson, an assignment editor for the station that produces KSAS' news broadcast, told The Associated Press a package the station received Feb. 16 contained the disk as well jewelry that may have been from one of the victims.

Pastor Michael Clark of Christ Lutheran Church – Rader's church – also said police asked him for a list of people who had access to the church computer.

On Friday, he provided 10 or 15 names, including Rader's, he said.

Rader has asked for Clark to visit him in jail, but he hasn't been able to arrange a meeting, the pastor said.

Juvenile executions banned

Supreme Court overturns 72 death sentences

By Hope Yen
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A closely divided Supreme Court outlawed the death penalty for juvenile criminals on Tuesday, declaring there was a national consensus that such executions were unconstitutionally cruel and ending a practice that had brought international condemnation.

The 5-4 decision, which overturns a 1989 high court ruling, throws out the death sentences of 72 murderers who committed their crimes as juveniles and bars states from seeking to execute others. Nineteen states had allowed death sentences for killers who committed their crimes when they were under 18.

The ruling was greeted with enthusiasm by numerous death penalty opponents both here and abroad.

Justice Anthony Kennedy, writing for the majority, said many juveniles lack maturity and intellectual development to understand the ramifications of their actions.

"The age of 18 is the point where society draws the line for many purposes between childhood and adulthood. It is, we conclude, the age at which the line for death eligibility ought to rest," Kennedy said.

The United States has stood almost alone in the world in officially sanctioning juvenile executions, a "stark reality" that can't be ignored, Kennedy wrote. Juvenile offenders have been put to death in recent years in only a few other countries, including Iran, Pakistan, China and Saudi Arabia.

"It is proper that we acknowledge the overwhelming weight of international opinion against the juvenile death penalty, resting in large part on the understanding that the instability and emotional imbalance of young people may often be a factor in the crime," Kennedy wrote.

In an angry dissent, Justice Antonin Scalia disputed that a "national consensus" exists and said the majority opinion was based on the "flimsiest of grounds." The appropriateness of capital punishment should be determined by individual states, not "the subjective views of five members of this court and like-minded foreigners," he wrote.

The ruling continues the court's practice of narrowing the scope of the death penalty, which it reinstated in 1976. Executions for those 15 and younger when they committed their crimes were outlawed in 1988. Three years ago, justices banned executions of the mentally retarded, citing a "national consensus" against executing a killer who may lack the intelligence to fully understand his crime.

In finding a similar consensus against juvenile executions, the court noted that most states bar them and those that allow them do so infrequently.

Only three states – Oklahoma, Texas and Virginia – have executed juveniles in the past 10 years.

Legal experts said the ruling could have widespread ramifications for the future of capital punishment, with courts empowered to strike down the practice on evolving notions of decency.

"The lasting significance of this case is that it opens the door to the abolition of the death penalty judicially," said Jordan Steiker, a death penalty expert at the University of Texas law school. "If a national consensus can emerge without a majority of the death penalty states moving toward abolition, then it suggests that judicial abolition is a genuine prospect."

The impact was immediate. In Prince William County, Va., officials said Tuesday they will not prosecute a murder case against teen sniper Lee Boyd Malvo, who is already serving life in prison in two of the 10 sniper killings that terrorized the Washington area in 2002.

Prince William County Commonwealth's Attorney Paul Ebert had hoped to get the death penalty for Malvo, who was 17 at the time of the killings, but he said another trial would now be an unnecessary expense.

"Today, the court repudiated the misguided idea that the United States can pledge to leave no child behind while simultaneously exiling children to the death chamber," said William F. Schulz, executive director of Amnesty International USA.

Troops withdraw from Lebanon

By Hussein Dakroub
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Elated at forcing out Lebanon's pro-Damascus government, flag-waving, singing protesters crowded downtown Beirut on Tuesday, as Syrian President Bashar Assad indicated he would withdraw Syria's 15,000 troops from Lebanon "maybe in the next few months."

Russia joined Egypt and Saudi Arabia in trying to persuade Syria to withdraw all its troops, and Assad told Time magazine that the troops would be out "maybe in the next few months. Not after that." The troops were originally deployed during Lebanon's 1975-90 civil war – ostensibly as peacekeepers – and Syria has held sway over Lebanese politics ever since.

The Lebanese opposition called for nightly protests to demand an end to Syrian control and the capture of former Prime Minister Rafik Hariri's assassins.

As politicians began searching for a replacement for ousted Prime Minister Omar Karami, opposition leaders planned to meet Wednesday to discuss how far to push their people power campaign and to ensure Damascus does not dominate Lebanon's new Cabinet.

Egypt and Saudi Arabia are trying to persuade Syria to accept a timetable for a complete withdrawal by April, Arab diplomats said on condition of anonymity.

Russia, a traditional ally of Syria, also called for a withdrawal on Tuesday, saying Damascus must respect the U.N. resolution demanding the troops leave.

"We will continue the sit-in every day until the Syrian army leaves Lebanon and until the truth is determined in Hariri's assassination."

Sami Makhlouf
LEBANESE STUDENT

A withdrawal is a key demand of the Lebanese opposition, the United States and United Nations.

About 2,000 protesters were in Beirut's central Martyrs' Square Tuesday evening, their numbers growing from a few hundred in the morning.

With many Lebanese awaiting political developments, protesters numbered far fewer than the 25,000 who demanded – and obtained – Karami's resignation.

"We will continue the sit-in every day until the Syrian army leaves Lebanon and until the truth is determined in Hariri's assassination," said Sami Makhlouf, an 18-year-old student waving Lebanon's red and white flag with the green cedar tree in the middle.

In reaction to the Time report, Syria appeared to back off the comments. A Syrian official, speaking on condition of anonymity in Damascus, questioned whether it could occur within months, saying the Taif Accord was the basis for this matter.

The 1989 accord does not necessarily rule out a full withdrawal within months. It calls for a redeployment to eastern Lebanon near the border, with a full pullout subject to negotiation.

Syria last week said it was committed to withdrawing according to the Taif agreement and Lebanon's defense minister said then a pullback to the border area would come soon. Both governments indicated there would not a full withdrawal for now, but that was before the government buckled in Beirut under popular pressure.

An opposition follow-up committee called on Lebanese to continue their "independence uprising" with peaceful nightly sit-ins at Martyrs' Square.

But an opposition meeting Wednesday is to decide whether to continue larger protests or pursue political means.

Troops lifted the cordon they had imposed around the city center Monday and Lebanon reopened after a one-day strike to protest Hariri's Feb. 14 assassination.

In London, U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice and French Foreign Minister Michel Barnier renewed calls for Syrian troops and intelligence agents to leave Lebanon.

Jackson defense attacks DNA evidence

By Tim Molloy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Michael Jackson's lawyer told jurors in a powerful opening statement Tuesday that authorities found no DNA evidence in the entertainer's bedroom to support child molestation charges and had to change the dates of the alleged crimes because the accuser's story changed.

"Mr. Jackson flat-out denies these molestation allegations," Thomas Mesereau Jr. told the jury. "They are false."

When Mesereau finished, the prosecution called as its first witness British journalist Martin Bashir, who made the TV documentary "Living With Michael Jackson." In the documentary, Jackson held hands with the 13-year-old boy who eventually accused him of molestation and acknowledged sharing his bedroom with children.

District Attorney Tom Sneddon then began showing the two-hour program to the jury.

Jackson, 46, is charged with molesting the boy at his Neverland Ranch in 2003, plying him with alcohol and conspiring to hold him and his family captive. Opening statements began Monday and wrapped up Tuesday with Mesereau's presentation.

The defense lawyer hinted that Jackson might testify in his own defense, but he never expressly told the jurors that Jackson will take the stand. Jackson is not on the defense witness list.

The defense attorney reminded jurors that in detailing specific acts of alleged molestation in opening statements, the prosecutor had given them this "lurid discussion of masturbation." Among the allegations Sneddon made were that Jackson told the boy masturbation was normal, then reached into the boy's underpants and masturbated the boy and himself.

But Mesereau said no DNA from the accuser was found in Jackson's bedroom.

DEBT | Credit card companies rely on late payment fees, interest charges on monthly balance to make profits

"It's really gotten to be a crisis," Young said. "Their debt can be overwhelming."

Having a bad credit record can prevent you from gaining future employment, she said.

Revolving door credit demand – primarily credit cards – rose by $554 million since last November from $925 million in December, the Federal Reserve reported last month.

In 2002, Americans had an overall credit card debt of $1.9 trillion, according to a Statistical Abstract of the United States.

Credit card debt doubled for people between the age of 18 and 24 in 2001, reaching an average of $2,985, a rise of 104 percent, according to Tamara Draut, director of Demos' Economic Opportunity Program.

Joyce Cantrell, instructor in the personal financing program in family studies and human services, said students should use their credit cards responsibly.

"Treat your credit card like a check. Don't live beyond your means," Cantrell said.

"Read the fine print, or (the interest rate) will jump up after six months."

Cantrell suggested debit cards and credit unions as an alternative for introducing students to new credit responsibilities.

Unlike credit cards, payment by debit card comes straight from a person's bank account.

"Debit cards can be used for immediate cash," a reason why many people choose credit cards, Cantrell said.

Credit unions are nonprofit credit institutions owned by each member.

They are federally insured and provide as much security as banks.

Todd Donavan, assistant professor in marketing, said late fees build debt.

"Credit card companies rely on customers being late," he said.

Under the National Banking Act of 1978, banks are allowed to charge late fees as high as their home states allow.

"A lot of major credit cards have as their home states states that don't have such laws," she said.

Donavan said students may need to transfer to a different card to find the right fit.

He also said people should avoid cards with annual fees.

"Don't think you have to stick with one credit card," he said. "Transfer and close if a card doesn't fit your personal needs."

Discussing competing interest rates with customer service can lower your monthly interest rates, Donavan said.

Both Cantrell and Donavan agreed credit cards can be useful in building credit history if paid off monthly, if only the minimum fee. Credit reports can be checked online at www.annualcreditreport.com.

Cantrell said there needs to be a transition stage when using credit cards.

"Freshmen and sophomores shouldn't use credit cards," she said.

"Juniors and seniors can use credit cards to their advantage in making the transition into the business world."

Cantrell said people should be explicit when saying no to solicitors.

"We've been raised to be polite," she said. "It's your cash. You have the right to say no."

Cantrell recommended checking out Bankrate.com, a non-profit credit organization of the Federal Credit Bureau, for credit advice.

"Credit cards aren't evil, but should be used carefully like any other tool," she said.

"significantly earlier" than usual.

"Could you almost set your watch by him?" asked Tom Bath, a special prosecutor for the case.

"Yes," Bonine replied, adding she thought it unusual that Murray told her he would be home grading midterm exams that day. She said his normal routine was to tell her where he was going, but not what he would be doing.

In a statement Murray made to police, played to the jury last week, Murray said he would not have had time that day to go to Lawrence and be back home by the time his daughter was dropped off there.

Bonine said a jacket and shoes seized from Murray's home based on her description were not the same jacket and shoes he was wearing on the morning in question. A sheriff's deputy who searched the home said police did not leave behind any clothing matching what Bonine had described.

Bonine said that several weeks after the death, she asked Murray about the progress in the investigation and that he replied, "I just can't wait until they figure out that it's not my skin under her fingernails."

At the time of her death, Ross was in a relationship with a California man, Larry Lima. He testified Monday that they met at a conference in Wichita in 2002, and they exchanged vows and rings and considered themselves husband and wife. He said they planned a wedding ceremony the month that Ross was killed.

Joslyn Dugas, a Kansas City acupuncturist, testified that Ross missed an appointment with her the afternoon of Nov. 13, something she had never done before. Dugas also treated Murray, and said he was upset and "stressed out" when she last saw him in July 2003, after the divorce.

Dugas said that when she suggested he move on with his life, "His response was, 'I can't do that' because Carmin had ruined his life."

Photos of the victim's body and the crime scene were shown to the jurors on Monday. Much of the testimony this week will center on physical evidence, with the coroner and the director of the Kansas Bureau of Investigation's crime lab among those due to take the stand.

certain candidates and stacking the deck, I think it's a little unfair," he said.

Schindler said the committee could eventually have an adverse effect on Manhattan.

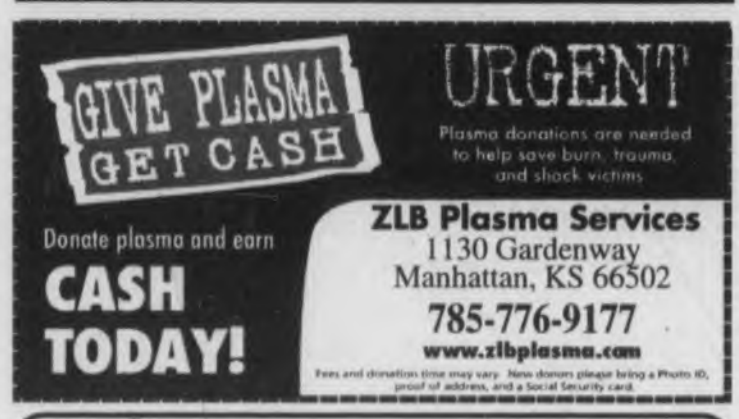
"I'm really worried. I can see a trend starting," he said. "If the general election goes the way the primary went, citizens will not like the way the city is run."

Schindler said he now plans to give his support to Hatesohl, Robinson and McCune.

"I will do all I can to help those candidates," he said.

Sherow, who came in third with almost 17 percent of the vote, said he appreciated the support of CBM.

"They've been active in drumming up support. They're a good group of people with the best interest of Manhattan at heart."



County Clerk Rich Vargo said about 3,700 people, or 14 percent of eligible voters, turned out for the primary. The 2003 primary drew 13 percent of voters.

Sherow said he was impressed by voter turnout.

"The voters showed a greater interest in this election," he said. "There are a lot of issues in front of the commission that need very serious consideration."

Men head to Lawrence hoping to spoil Kansas' senior night

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Wildcats face an up hill battle tonight as they travel to Lawrence for a rematch against the No. 7 Kansas Jayhawks.

Despite coming into the game riding a two-game winning streak, the Wildcats (15-10, 5-9) face a Jayhawk team (21-4, 11-3) coming off its most important win of the season on Sunday, downing then-No. 4 Oklahoma State 81-79 to take a one-game lead over the Cowboys in the Big 12 Conference standings with two regular season games left.

The win over the Cowboys also broke Kansas' three-game losing streak, and put it in position for a possible No. 1 seed heading into the NCAA Tournament.

"It feels good to smile, but we realize that we still have a lot of work to do with two games left," Kansas senior guard Keith Langford said after the game against the Cowboys. "We tried to stay positive after every loss. As tough as it was (losing), we knew in the back of our minds that winning the Big 12 was a possibility."

Not only will K-State play in a building it has not won in since 1994, but the Wildcats will face the added emotion of senior day at Allen Fieldhouse.

"You have to factor that in," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "This group of seniors have been highly successful and because of that, there will be some added emotion. It is something we will have to deal with, especially early in the game."

Kansas will honor the senior class of Aaron Miles, Wayne Simien, Keith Langford and Michael Lee, who have led the Jayhawks to appearances in two of the past three Final Fours.

Kansas coach Bill Self said although the Jayhawks have a leg-up in the conference, his team hasn't done anything yet.

"There are so many things going on distraction-wise, we can't let that take away from us winning the basketball game (against K-State)," Self said after the Oklahoma State win. "We've got a lot of work to do. We control our own destiny. We still have two tough games left."

Simien, the reigning Big 12 Player of the Week, scored a career-high 32 points and grabbed 12 rebounds for his 13th double-double of the season to lead the Jayhawks to the win.

"He is one of the great players, not only in our conference, but in the nation," Wooldridge said. "It's not just his skill level, it's the intangibles he brings to the floor every night."

In Kansas' 74-65 win Feb. 9 over K-State, Simien scored 23 points on 8-of-16 shooting and pulled in 13 rebounds.

Wooldridge said it will be difficult to slow down the 6-foot-9 senior.

"No one has stopped him yet," Wooldridge said. "We'll have to put a body on him and check him off the boards, double-team him and emphasize where is he is on the floor all the time."

The Wildcats are coming off a big win of their own on Saturday.

K-State avenged a Feb. 5 home loss to the Colorado Buffaloes with a 84-82 win in Boulder, Colo., on Saturday.

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey registered his 12th career double-double, with 28 points on 10-of-13 shooting and a career-high 19 rebounds.

In the Wildcat's nine-point loss to Kansas, Massey nearly matched Simien, with 20 points on 6-of-16 shooting, and was 8-of-11 from the free-throw line.

During K-State's two-game winning streak, the 6-foot-7 senior has shot 80 percent from the floor and has averaged 26 points per game.

"He's a red-flag player," Wooldridge said. "I'm sure Kansas is going to go after him and be physical with him."

The win moved the Wildcats ahead of the Buffaloes in the standings and gave them their best regular season record since the 1998-99 season.

Despite the Wildcats' recent success, Wooldridge also knows there is still work to be done.

"We've got some success ahead of us – if we play well this week," Wooldridge said.

"This group of seniors have been highly successful and because of that, there will be some added emotion. It is something we will have to deal with, especially early in the game."

Cats set for season finale

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State travels to Columbia, Mo., today to take on the Missouri Tigers in the season finale for the Wildcats.

The No. 17-ranked Wildcats (20-6, 11-4) are coming off a 73-46 dismantling of the Kansas Jayhawks, and have won their last three games by an average of 24.6 points per game.

"Right now, I think our team has continued to improve every game and every day," Coach Deb Patterson said. "We're answering the game competitively."

K-State is hoping to add to its three-game winning streak at Missouri (10-16, 4-11), and take that momentum through the Big 12 Tournament and into the NCAA Tournament.

"We are managing the game very well and executing well," Patterson said. "I think that is very important at this time. We're really geared up for the thought of competing well in the NCAA Tournament.

"Hopefully, every day is about getting just a little bit better."

Senior forward Kendra Wecker is also looking forward to Big 12 Tournament play, but she said the Wildcats are not overlooking the Tigers.

"We're looking forward to tournament play definitely," Wecker said. "We've got one more game at Missouri and we need to get a win there to put ourselves in that top-four spot in the (Big 12) tournament so that we can get a first-round bye. Then after Wednesday, it's all about continuing to get better."

Prior to K-State's three-game winning streak, the Wildcats struggled with back-to-back losses to Oklahoma and Texas.

"If you look at the games when we were struggling, if you look at our assist numbers there, and then if you look at our assist number these last few games, you'll see a trend with that," senior Laurie Koehn said. "When we are running our offense well and making the right passes and being patient, good things happen for us."

Wecker attributes K-State's turn-around to a step up in its defense.

"I think we've brought an awareness to defending the three," Wecker said. "Up in Lincoln, we gave (Kiera) Hardy a couple of looks, but I thought against KU, they shot 2-for-10 from the three-point line, and they got their only threes in the first half off of pretty much the exact same play. We went in and talked about it at halftime and we got the job done."

Wins over Nebraska and Kansas and four straight double-doubles helped earn Wecker Big 12 Player of the Week honors for the third time this season.

Missouri is coming off a 70-65 overtime win over Nebraska on Saturday in Lincoln, Neb. It was Missouri's first overtime win since a three-point victory in the first round of the 2003 WNIT against Western Illinois.

Missouri was led by sophomore Carlynn Savant, who earned her first career double-double with 11 points and a career- and game-high 14 rebounds and was one of four Tigers in double-figure in scoring.

Former K-Stater sophomore Tiffany Brooks had 18 points to lead all scorers.

Today is senior day for Missouri, who will be saying goodbye to seniors Megan Roney and Shea Swoboda.

For K-State, this will be the last regular season game for seniors Wecker, Koehn, Megan Mahoney, Brie Madden and Chelsea Domenico.

The senior Wildcats have led K-State to a 100-25 record over the last four years. One more victory would give K-State the best four-year stretch in the program's history after going 100-33 between 1979-82. In all, the seniors have been a part of three NCAA Tournament appearances, the program's first Big 12 Conference title and a top 25 ranking for 66 consecutive weeks.

K-State will take the floor against the Tigers at 7 tonight at Mizzou Arena.

Koehn takes aim at NCAA record

K-State 3-point ace returning to form as postseason nears

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The thousands of K-State fans who have watched Wildcat senior guard Laurie Koehn shoot a three-point shot know that if she gets the open look, you usually can add three points to the scoreboard even before you hear the swish of the net.

Koehn, K-State's leading career three-point shooter, has racked up an amazing 373 career 3-pointers, good enough to be third on the NCAA's career list. She is now just 19 3-pointers away from breaking former BYU player Erin Thorn's NCAA record of 391, which was set back in 2003.

"She definitely spreads the floor and spreads a defense out," senior guard Megan Mahoney said. "I think, for herself, it's great for her game, and for our team as well, when she can hit that long shot."

But earlier this season, that long shot wasn't falling quite right for the three-point ace, or so she said.

"The games when we were really struggling, that stretch from when we played at Colorado until the Texas game, we were really struggling offensively," Koehn said. "We obviously weren't getting any production, for sure out of me, and Kendra (Wecker) had to do everything. I totally take responsibility for that in many ways."

While it is true that the Wildcats struggled offensively during the five-game stretch from Jan. 29 to Feb. 16, losing three of their five games and averaging just 66 points per game, Koehn still managed to knock down 15 3-pointers.

However, the shot Koehn remembers most was not one of the makes. Instead, it was a miss that occupied her mind.

At home against Texas on Feb. 16, with the Wildcats trailing 63-60, Koehn found herself wide open on the left wing with the ball in her hands. She fired up a shot, and most Wildcat fans believed the normally deadly-accurate Koehn would sink the trey to tie the score.

But the shot bounced long, and the Longhorns went on to win 64-60, their first win at Bramlage Coliseum.

After the game, a visibly distraught Koehn blamed the loss on herself.

"I feel like, in a way, I let our team down, and it's just something you've got to fix," she said, fighting back tears.

If she was in need of a fix, she certainly got it.

In the three games following the loss to Texas, Koehn has enjoyed the most productive three-point shooting stretch of the season.

In games against Colorado, Nebraska and Kansas, Koehn has hit five, four and five 3-pointers, respectively.

Koehn said the Wildcats' confidence as a team and the renewed focus to running the offense has gotten her back in a groove.

"Obviously, we're playing a lot more confidently now because we are doing things right, we are executing our offense like we need to and that just changes everything," she said. "I think as we've been more focused in on our offense and really been more patient and executed better, it's opened things up. I feel like I've gotten better looks recently, and it's a tribute to what everyone else is doing on the floor."

Mahoney said she can't explain Koehn's sudden outburst of 3-pointers, but she is happy Koehn has found a way of getting more shots to fall.

"I don't know what it is exactly, if she's getting open looks or if she's shooting more confidently," Mahoney said. "I'm not sure what it is exactly, but I think it's great for our basketball team."

Coggins remains inconsistent for Cats

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Every game, you know that senior Kendra Wecker will finish with a double-double or be the team's leading scorer. You know that senior Laurie Koehn will draw a spy defensively that will not let her get an open three-point look, and that fellow senior Megan Mahoney will do a little bit of everything on both ends of the court.

The one thing that you are never quite sure of is whether sophomore Claire Coggins will put up a quick six points in a minute or pick up a quick two fouls.

In Saturday's win over Kansas, Coggins went scoreless in the first half and following two quick fouls, was on the bench after only playing three minutes.

The second half showcased her all-around abilities. Coggins knocked down a 3-pointer, got to the free-throw line twice, knocking down all her attempts, grabbed two offensive rebounds, dished out two assists, had a steal and finished with nine points – all in less than 10 minutes on the court.

"Claire is a very key element to everything we do on both ends of the floor," coach Deb Patterson said. "It's not necessarily about scoring; it's about basketball decisions. It's about the quality of accountability of bringing it defensively. Over the course of time, point production comes if it's meant to. She really played well for us (Saturday), but the foul trouble is something we would like for her to continue to avoid, but I would rather her err on the side of being aggressive."

After a career-high 25 points with a career-high five 3-pointers against Colorado last month, Coggins has struggled for points and minutes.

In the month of February, Coggins averaged seven points a game and played 19 minutes per game. In her previous eight Big 12 Conference games, Coggins was on the court an average of 27 minutes a game and scored an average of 13 points per game.

In last Wednesday's win at Nebraska, Coggins finished with 18 points in 26 minutes. It was the first time in five games she scored in double figures.

Wecker said Coggins brings another scoring threat to the court and the more time she gets on the court, the better it will be for the team heading into tournament play.

"She's a great presence at the guard spot," Wecker said. "She's big, she's athletic, she's got long arms, she can score the ball from the outside or penetrate. She brings it on the defensive end, but offensively she brings that other scoring weapon. I think the more reps she gets, the more comfortable she feels about being on the floor, which is not only going to help her but also the team as we head into the tournament."

Massey's energy needed

It's hard to believe senior forward Jeremiah Massey has registered only four double-doubles this season.

MATTHEW GIRARD

The good news is Massey got that fourth one Saturday against Colorado by scoring 28 points and collecting a career-high 19 rebounds, and it couldn't have come at a better time.

In fact, it was the first time Massey had grabbed more than nine rebounds in a game since hauling in 10 boards against Iowa State on Jan. 26.

It could be argued that his lack of rebounds before the Colorado game showed a lack of aggressiveness on Massey's part, but that couldn't be further from the truth.

Although it would be nice to see his average rebounds per game be in double-digits, Massey is still taking charges and diving for loose balls, and he's been a catalyst for the Wildcats.

The energy is there, it just doesn't show up in the stats.

Yes, the Wildcats had already ended their six-game losing streak last Wednesday against Baylor, and Massey had 24 points, but playing against a team that has only one league win during the season is hardly a game that sparks a late-season rally.

The Wildcats needed to beat Colorado for momentum's sake, and needed Massey to be a major factor on the boards.

Not only did the win move them into 10th place, but it avenged the 10-point defeat to the Buffaloes on Feb. 5 – the day K-State retired the jerseys of Jack Parr, Bob Boozer and Ernie Barrett.

The 6-foot-7 senior did what he needed to do at the right time.

By putting the team on his shoulders and carrying them to a win, Massey proved once again why he will be sorely missed next year.

K-State has him for two more regular season games and the Big 12 Conference Tournament.

It's that time of year when players like Massey need to have the games of their lives every time out, and there is no reason for him to let up now.

Like I said at the season's start, the Wildcats will only go as far as Massey will take them.

Hopefully it's into the postseason.

Senior not done leaving his mark at K-State

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The career of senior forward Jeremiah Massey has spanned only two seasons.

But Massey has made a big impact on K-State basketball in that short time, as he enters the final two regular season games of his career.

In two years, the Oxnard Community College transfer has led the team in scoring 24 times and rebounding on 29 occasions. It has taken Massey just two seasons to crack the top 25 in K-State history in points and steals.

Coach Jim Wooldridge, in his fifth season, said Massey is the best player he's ever coached.

"I think so," Wooldridge said. "I don't think there's any doubt he produced more and impacted games more."

Massey has excelled during Big 12 Conference this season with his aggressive play, shooting touch and raw emotion.

The Detroit native is one of only three players to rank among the Big 12's top 10 in scoring, rebounding, field goal percentage and free throw percentage – Kansas' Wayne Simien and Oklahoma State's Joey Graham are the others – with averages of 17.6 points and 6.9 rebounds per game, while shooting 51.5 percent from the field and 79 percent from the line.

If the season ended today, Massey's season scoring average would be the highest since Askia Jones scored 22.1 per game in 1993-94.

For the first time since Elliot Hatcher was first-team All-Big 8 in 1996, the Wildcats have a legitimate first-team all-conference candidate in Massey.

Massey said he never doubted his ability to play basketball at a big university like K-State.

"I'm not surprised at how I'm doing this year," Massey said.

"I know what I'm capable of, and I'm happy the ball is dropping a little easier for me."

What might hurt Massey's chances is the Wildcats' 5-9 conference record and 10th-place standing, but Wooldridge said Massey should still be considered one of the best.

"I think when votes are cast you look at both (record and individual performance)," Wooldridge said.

"I do think Jeremiah Massey has been one of the best players in the league and his stats reflect that."

Massey's 28 points and career-high 19 rebounds in Saturday's win at Colorado helped propel last season's Big 12 Newcomer of the Year to more recognition.

In two wins over Baylor and the Buffaloes, Massey has put up a total of 52 points, gone 20-of-25 from the field and 12-of-15 from the free-throw line and grabbed 24 rebounds.

Massey can find a fan in tonight's opposing coach, the Jayhawks' Bill Self.

"You look at his numbers and how he carries the team and how the team centers around him and how defenses are designed to stop him first: he deserves plenty of recognition," Self said.

After struggling through the first half of last season, Wooldridge said Massey found his stride and became a force.

"He really didn't get going until January of last year," Wooldridge said.

"He only has had a year and a half. I don't know if in that period of time anybody else has done what he's done."

Massey has shown the ability to carry the Wildcats, tearing through the Big 12 season after fighting off an ankle injury in the first two games against Nebraska and Texas Tech.

"The injury was very hard," Massey said. "When you get hurt, you can't do the things you need to do to help your team. I'm just glad my teammates stepped up for me while I was hurting, and I'm doing a lot better now."

Massey's presence will be gone soon for Wooldridge, as the star's career winds down.

"I hate to see him go," Wooldridge said.

"He's at the forefront of our team right now."

Massey said his time as a Wildcat has been fun, but he isn't looking at the end just yet.

"I've enjoyed being at K-State a lot," he said.

"I think I've helped make this team better, but right now, we're looking to win these last two games and go into the tournament strong, and we want to make postseason play."

GlobalFlyer continues toward Salina despite fuel problem

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

SALINA, Kan. – Steve Fossett has his sights set on Salina.

Fossett took off from Salina Monday. After discovering he had lost 2,600 pounds of the original 18,100 pounds of fuel Wednesday morning, completing the mission that would set the record for a solo, nonstop flight around the world seemed impossible.

But strong tailwinds have given Fossett and the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer team hope.

As of Wednesday night, Fossett was northeast of Hawaii and was expected to land in Salina early afternoon today.

Earlier Wednesday, the mission control team had to determine whether Fossett, who was flying just east of Japan, would turn back to Japan or continue on to Hawaii. The decision was made at 1:30 p.m. to continue at least to Hawaii.

"The mission hangs in balance, and it's touch and go," Paul Moore, project manager, said. "Fuel alone will not take him to Kansas and around the world."

For more information
To track the GlobalFlyer's progress, go to www.globalflyer.com.

The cause of the fuel loss was not certain but fuel tanks were full at takeoff based on measurements completed by an independent body required for the world record verification.

At a 10 p.m. press briefing, Moore said that because the tailwinds had been up to 130 knots, Fossett had decided to continue flying toward the United States. He needs an average of 58 knots to make it the entire route.

However, the wind advantage will end as Fossett changes directions, heading into the jet stream as he approaches the California coast.

Moore said the tailwinds could drop as low as 30-40 knots.

The plane has the capability of gliding 200 miles without fuel if necessary.

See GLOBALFLYER Page 10

Project Director Paul Moore talks to media during a press conference late Wednesday night at Mission Control in Salina, Kan. After news late in the afternoon of a possible landing in Honolulu, Mission Control and pilot Steve Fossett confirmed a landing in Salina today is likely.

Autopsy pictures shown at Murray trial

By Bailey DeReus
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE – The Douglas County coroner testified in the murder trial of Carmin Ross, ex-wife of K-State professor Thomas Murray, who is on trial for killing Ross in November 2003.

Dr. Erik Mitchell, Douglas County coroner, testified about the injuries that caused Ross' death.

The prosecution submitted photographs taken during the autopsy and displayed them for the jury. Pictures included views of Ross' head, face, neck, back, hands, arms and legs. All showed the lacerations, stab wounds and abrasions that were inflicted on Ross by her killer.

Mitchell said in his testimony there were more than 11 groups of lacerations on Ross' face and head. One of the areas of impact was hard enough to expose part of Ross' skull.

"There were multiple impacts on the area around the left temple," Mitchell said of Ross' injuries.

The coroner said there were about 13 stab wounds to Ross' neck. Mitchell said he believes she was still alive when she was stabbed in the neck "because there was a lot of blood." He also believed the stab wounds and the lacerations to her head occurred approximately at the same time. If there was any time between the injuries, blood pressure would be lower and there would not have been as much blood.

The pictures of Ross caused many in the courtroom to look away.

Mitchell ruled Ross' death a homicide, but could not determine the day or time of death.

Lacy Bonine testified Monday and spoke of her relationship to Murray, Ross and Ciara, the couple's four-year-old daughter. Bonine, who was a student at K-State in 2003, babysat for Ciara for two years.

She saw Murray the morning Ross was murdered when he brought Ciara to where Bonine babysat her and two other children. Bonine mentioned Murray was significantly earlier than most days and that he told her he was going to be grading midterms but not where he was going to be, which was not usually the case.

"Usually, (he would tell me) where he was going to be, not what he was going to be doing," Bonine said.

Bonine was questioned about what Murray was wearing the morning of the 13th and the details of the day.

In Murray's taped testimony from November 2003, he said cuts on his High fives, hugs and handshakes were passed all around Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbeque Wednesday night amid wild cheers from supporters of president and vice president candidate pair Michael Burns and Grant Groene.

Burns and Groene took first in the Student Governing Association primary election with 1,688 votes and will face Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner next week's general election.

The two briefly thanked supporters for their help so far, but reminded them that there is still a week left to campaign.

"It's important that you go out next week. Tell them (other students) to vote," Burns, senior in agricultural education, said to supporters. "We're really excited. Hopefully we're here a week from now celebrating a victory."

After the announcement, Burns and Groene momentarily breathed a sigh of relief.

"The stress is gone, for a little while," Burns said. "But the work doesn't stop here."

Between now and the general election, Burns, Groene and their supporters will continue to campaign hard.

"We'll continue to talk to groups and tell them about our platform," Burns said. "We'll continue to chalk and hang signs and we'll continue running a positive campaign."

Both reiterated their platform, noting that the four pillars appealed to different groups of students.

"We just want to do things to make students' lives at the university better than they already are," Groene, senior in agronomy, said.

Burns said the pair's contracted tuition rate hit home with underclassmen and the restructured service fee with sophomores and juniors. The graduate teaching assistant workshops attracted graduate students, while all students liked the concept of online teacher evaluations.

"All of our issues hit home with different students," Burns said.

The duo highlighted their compatibility and experience as reasons why students should vote for them next

Moore, Wagner to connect with students, emphasize platform

By Lacey Storer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The crowd at Kite's Bar and Grill in Aggieville held its breath as they waited to find out whether Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner would be advancing to the general elections.

The hush turned into cheers, hugs and high fives as it was announced that with a total of 1,072, Moore and Wagner had made it to the next round.

"We've got a lot of work to do, and we're going to get this next week," Moore, junior in information systems, told their supporters after the results were announced.

"I was speechless. It's an amazing feeling when you hear your name announced as a winner of the primaries," Moore said. "And then I thought about all of the work we're going to have to do for the generals."

Campaigning starts immediately for the pair as they prepare to spread their message of "Get Moore" to K-State students.

"We are going to be launching the biggest campaign of sidewalk chalking, poster hanging and meeting every student we can throughout the next week," Moore said.

A large part of their campaign will focus on talking to students and student organizations. Wagner, sophomore in management information systems, said they wanted to let students know that if elected, the goals they have set will be achieved.

"We're going to focus on our entire platform," Wagner said. "We've set goals that are very attainable, and we're going to let students know that."

Some of the goals in the pair's campaign include stabilizing tuition, voting on construction of a parking garage, implementing online teacher evaluations and improving healthcare for graduate students.

Wagner said they will emphasize all of these issues, as each issue is equally important to students.

"I think they are all really important and that they will all make a positive impact on students," Wagner said.

As for their competitors, Moore said they are looking forward to

NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

BTK evidence search
As Dennis Rader was formally charged with 10 counts of first-degree murder in the BTK serial killings, investigators used metal detectors to search for new evidence along roads in Rader's suburban hometown. Park City, Kan., sheriff said a task force is investigating new information, but declined to elaborate.

Ten Commandments
Ten Commandments displays should be allowed on government property because they pay tribute to America's religious and legal history, the Supreme Court was told Wednesday, in cases that could render a new definition of the role that religion plays in the life of the nation.

Syria needs to leave
President Bush on Wednesday demanded in blunt terms that Syria get out of Lebanon, saying that Damascus' authority over the political affairs of its neighbor must end now. He applauded the strong message sent to Syria when Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice and French Foreign Minister Michel Barnier held a news conference in London on Tuesday.

ELECTIONS 2005

Voting for Student Governing Association general elections begins 8 a.m. Tuesday and ends 6 p.m. Wednesday. Vote at www.k-state.edu/elections.

Schmit, Holtzen accept defeat, look forward to next year's race

Bill Schmit, left, and Jack Holtzen, right, discuss the results of the election during an interview at Holtzen's house on Moro St. They received the lowest number of votes for a registered pair, totaling 211.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The primary election was a disappointment for presidential candidate pair Bill Schmit and Jack Holtzen who came in fourth with 5 percent of the student vote.

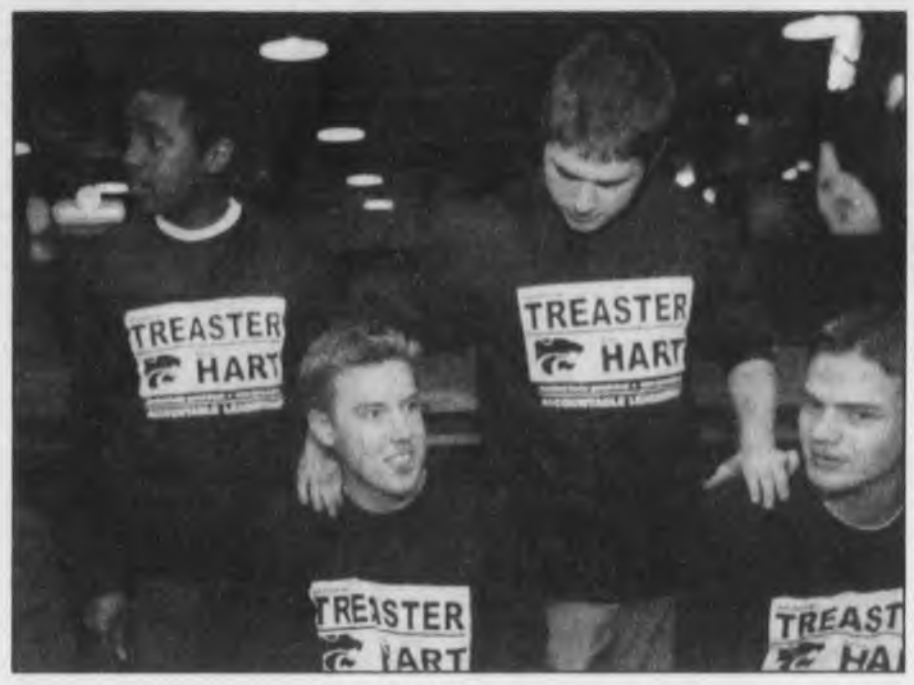
However, they were pleased with their campaign, their support and the teams chosen to move on.

Despite the outcome, Schmit and Holtzen said this election will not end their political careers, and they plan to run again.

"Definitely next year, I think, is going to be the year," Holtzen said.

The team said several factors contributed to their loss. They got a much later start than the other three pairs, which hurt their ability to find sponsors and rushed their campaign, Schmit said.

"It was our first run and that hurt our chances, but hopefully our issues will spark some ideas in the candidates going on," Schmit said.



Schmit and Holtzen support Burns and Groene, who share similar interests, but like both pairs, Schmit said.

"Both groups running are good guys," Schmit said. "We wish them the best of luck."

Schmit and Holtzen said they enjoyed the campaign trail even though it didn't end as they'd hoped.

"It was a great experience, Schmit said. "No matter what, I have no regrets. We had a great time."

Treaster, Hart disappointed with 3rd place primary finish

Student body presidential candidate Andrew Treaster (top right) consoles vice presidential candidate Dave Hart (bottom left) after the announcement that they placed third in the primary elections failing to qualify for the general elections.

Sighs of disbelief followed the radio announcement.

Andrew Treaster and David Hart, presidential and vice presidential candidates, found out they would not move on to the general elections, coming in third place with 901 votes Wednesday night at Bobby T's Bar and Deli.

After the top two pairs were announced, the radio was turned off while Treaster and Hart remained silent in front of a crowd of about 75 supporters.

"It's disappointing when the amount of work doesn't pay off," Hart said. "But someone has to go through it.

"It's a test for you. It was a long month taking hard classes while putting in four to five hours a day meeting with groups."

Treaster said he agreed and was not going to endorse a candidate in the general election.

"They can fight it out," Treaster said.

Both said, however, they filed to run for student senator positions in the general election and hope to push some of their ideas next year.

Despite the loss, Treaster said he was grateful for his supporters.

TO THE POINT

Candidates should run fair campaigns

The SGA presidential primaries are over and the winning pairs have moved on to the general elections.

The winning candidates have proven their responsibility thus far, but now it is time to go the extra mile.

It is important that the candidates remember to run a clean campaign.

Remaining candidates should keep common sense in mind while campaigning and respect each other during interviews. Candidates and their supporters should run a campaign that they can be proud of when the race is over, whether they win or lose.

There have been several incidences of campaign violations during the course of the elections. Everyone should watch for potential violations so the campaign stays as clean and as fair as possible.

The student body should keep in mind that there are actual issues in the race and that it is more than a popularity contest. Resources are available to help all students learn the platforms of the remaining candidates.

Voting intelligently on the issues improves the chance that K-State will be favorably affected and the most qualified candidates will win the election next week.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

It's a heat wave

Radicals exaggerate the effect of global warming problem

GRANT REICHERT

Repent! The end is near! Temperatures will rise 5.4 degrees Fahrenheit by 2100! Sunscreen will be used as currency in a Mad Max-esque, post-apocalyptic world where the few survivors – bearing unhealthy, sorority-style tans – try to live in a world which is slightly warmer than our own!

I know what you're thinking: "2100? Rock on! I'll be dead by then! Let's go light a pile of tires on fire." And what do we care about future people, anyway? If we've learned anything from the abortion debate, it's that future people aren't worth the fetuses they're made of.

But we can't ignore global warming, or "The Eskimo Plan for World Domination." If we do, then the fanatics will take over, and they'll do something stupid like try to stop it.

Global warming is occurring at less than breakneck speed: by 2100, the temperature of Earth will have increased around 5.4 degrees . This number comes from the UN-created Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. Since it's an arm of the United Nations, I can't vouch for the accuracy of this number, but I'll accept it for now.

In order to curb this 5.4 degree increase, environmentalists say we need to adopt the Kyoto treaty. But what effect would Kyoto have on the temperature increase by 2100? If we pick among the most optimistic of climate models, the best case scenario for Kyoto is that by 2100, the increase in world temperature would be approximately 5.1 degrees instead of 5.4. And these climate models weren't conducted by Republican hacks or Eskimos, but rather by – among others – Yale professor William Nordhaus and Thomas Wigley of the IPCC.

Attempts like Kyoto to cut carbon emissions wouldn't just be ineffective. They would be inhumane.

It would be inhumane because the devastating effect that curbing carbon emissions would have on the world economy would quickly plunge millions more in Africa and Asia into destitution long before world temperatures have risen one degree.

Global warming is not a problem we should be worried about when fixing it would take an incredible investment of money for such a low return on such a distant problem. There are more immediate problems such as AIDS and malaria.

Scientific progress is exponential. There's no telling what the world of fifty years from now will hold.

Presently, we are on the verge of startling breakthroughs in nanotechnology, which will allow us to manipulate the world at its most basic level. After crossing this threshold, anything will be possible.

We've already discovered ways to use nanoscopic particles of gold as catalysts to remove carbon monoxide from the environment. Within the next hundred years, we will be able to purge chemicals from our environment with the push of a button, not through economically devastating and ineffective treaties.

The engine of progress – if allowed to chug on unfettered – will burn cleaner and cleaner.

The air in London during the industrial revolution was much more polluted than it is now. Nanotechnology is likewise positioned to usher in a cleaner era, possibly centered on the promising technology of nanoscopic photovoltaic cells which would provide a cheap, viable source of solar energy, and which could be placed as a thin film over anything from highways to khakis.

We need to actively ignore global warming for the time being – to get inaction in action. We simply cannot put off procrastinating any longer. Or, as Carbon the Bear would say, "Only you can't prevent global warming."

Grant Reichert is a sophomore in political science. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Global warming deserves action, attention from the public

AARON DUNCAN

While Grant and I can agree that global warming exists, only one of us thinks it's a problem. Grant thinks that we do not need to do anything to stop it, which is sort of like acknowledging that cigarette smoking causes cancer but not worrying because you're hoping to get hit by a car first.

Grant is not alone is his laissez-faire approach to global warming. He is joined by President Bush, the leaders of corporate America and people who think that "Earth, Wind and Fire" are part of the periodic table and not merely a '70s pop group.

Noticeably absent from those in Grant's camp are any reputable members of the scientific community. America needs to realize that it must change its polluting ways. As with all solutions, the first step is admitting the problem.

On September 10, 2004, Salon.com noted that "in a report sent to Congress at the end of August, government scientists argued that the warming of the atmosphere in recent decades cannot be explained by natural causes but must include such human sources as energy consumption and deforestation."

Global warming is occurring and the factual evidence supporting this conclusion is staggering.

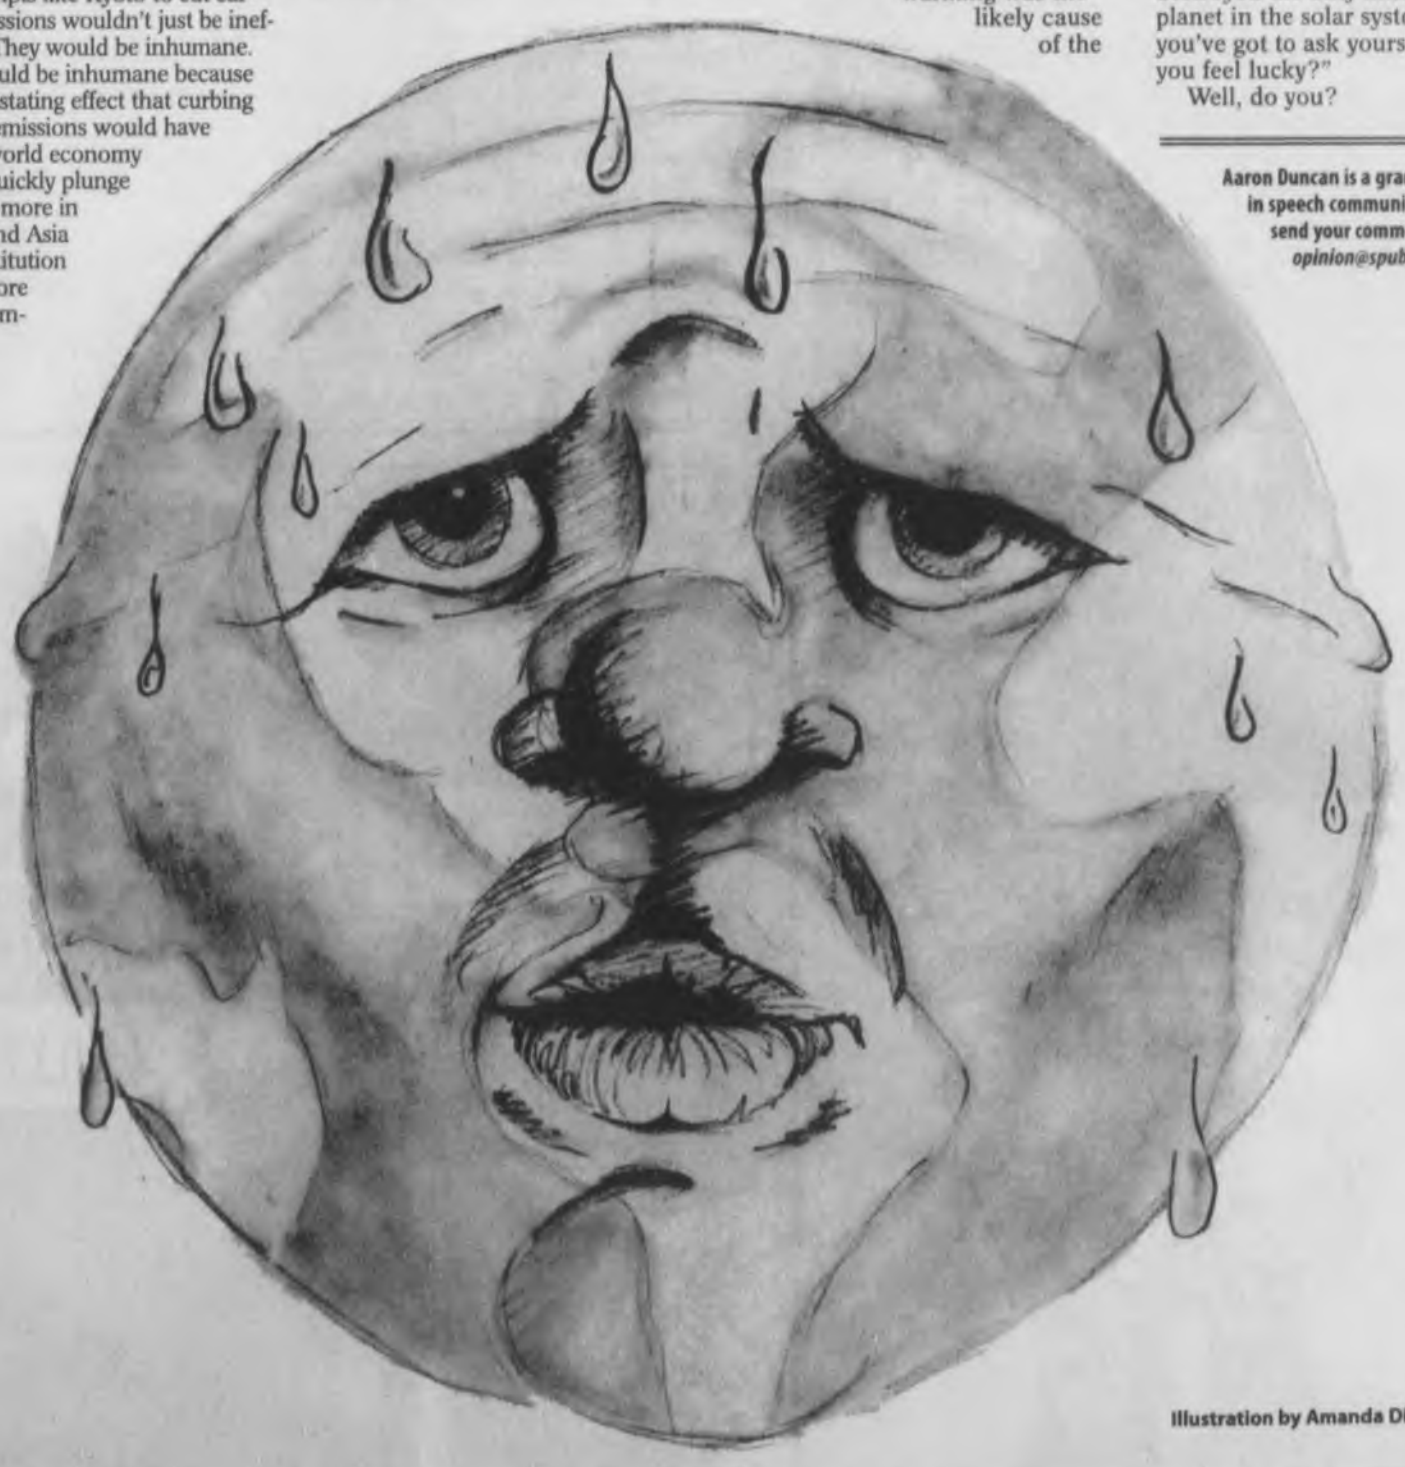
National Public Radio's "Talk of the Nation" on November 12, 2004, revealed that a group of nearly 300 scientists issued the most comprehensive study ever done on warming in the Arctic. The report says the polar ice cap is shrinking at such a rate that by the end of the century, summers in the Arctic may be ice-free. They concluded that global warming was the likely cause of the melting. The increase in the Earth's temperature in the past 30 years has been dramatic and far above normal increases.

The United States and Australia are the only industrialized nations that refuse to acknowledge the existence of global warming. Political leaders on both sides of the aisle are finally willing to take a stand on the issue. Senators John McCain and Joseph Lieberman have co-authored a bill to reduce U.S. emissions of greenhouse gases, but it is being resisted by America's largest and richest polluters.

Grant offers a U.N. study as proof that global warming is occurring, but he does not draw upon the study to support his conclusion about doing nothing.

Actually, the study he sites recommends taking actions to stop global warming. Sure, global warming is occurring at a slow rate, but even small changes in the Earth's temperature can melt the polar ice caps and create flooding. Modern scientists now believe that the ice age was caused by only a subtle change of a few degrees.

If you want to agree with Grant, you can choose to pray with him to the gods of nanotechnology and hope all's well that ends well.



Perhaps you are not familiar with the adage that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Keep in mind that there is no evidence from scientists willing to support the claim that global warming is as harmless as K-State's offensive line.

Nanotechnology has been around since the 1970s, and the assertion that it is a cure-all is absurd and foolhardy. If we're lucky and science advances, we may save the planet.

If we are unlucky, we will have destroyed the only inhabitable planet in the solar system. So you've got to ask yourself, "Do you feel lucky?"

Well, do you?

Despite violations candidate pair receives write-in votes

Parker, Schirer not allowed to take office due to new election regulations after disqualification

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students could write in Jeremy Parker and Dustin Schirer as student body president and vice president, but their votes didn't count.

Parker and Schirer were disqualified Sunday due to committing four minor violations. Three minor violations equal one major violation.

The pair received 22 write-in votes.

According to the election regulations, disqualified candidates are not allowed to take an office through write-in campaigns. The change was made this year.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said that with the online voting system, students could vote for disqualified candidates because they could not make the system block out students.

"It automatically searches the K-State database, and we can't take students out of the database," he said.

Rob Caffey, director of mediated education, said the voting program could be adjusted to disallow students from voting for disqualified candidates.

"We could make our application work that way," he said. "The system does exactly what it's suppose to provided by the specifications of SGA.

"We just host the application that runs the election. The determination for who's on the ballot is handled by the SGA."

McCandless said the program is paid for by student money.

"It's the students' money that is spent for the elections systems, and it would be the students' money to change it," he said. "If money weren't an object, then sure we'd try to find a way to fix it."

Although students may not have known about the change in regulations, McCandless said they should stay informed.

"We're constantly in the process of updating the regulations," he said. "It's students' fault if they're not informed on what's going on."

Haiduk, Gorrell win Salina presidential primary with 77 votes

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

ELECTIONS 2005

Voting for Student Governing Association general elections begins 8 a.m. Tuesday and ends 6 p.m. Wednesday. Vote at www.k-state.edu/elections.

K-State-Salina results

Candidates votes

- Brendan Haiduk/Nathan Gorrell: 77
- Josh Koch/Lindsey Boeckman: 49
- Write-in candidates: 4

A primary was held at K-State Salina despite there being two pairs for president and vice president.

"Everything was set up for three, and when the third pair of candidates was disqualified it was asked that the primary still be held as a sort of 'pre-election poll,'" said Adam Volcek, elections committee chair at Salina.

Brendan Haiduk and Nathan Gorrell finished first with 77 votes. Josh Koch and Lindsey Boeckman had 49 votes.

"It was mainly done as an indicator for the president and vice president campaigns. The main significance of the election was to get out there and at least vote for Manhattan campus elections," Volcek said.

Koch, junior in technology management, said he and Boeckman did not do much campaigning for the primary.

"We've been so busy with GlobalFlyer, but things should calm down by the general elections next week. We really aren't going to change anything for next week," said Koch.

GlobalFlyer is a record-setting attempt to fly solo around the world without refueling that is taking off from Salina.

Haiduk, sophomore in airway science in the professional pilot program, said the results aren't going to change he and Gorrell's campaigning.

"We still have the same issues on things we want to get done," said Haiduk.

The general election runs from 8 a.m. Tuesday to 6 p.m. Wednesday.

"We hope there's a good turnout for the general election next week," said Koch.

Student senate to oppose same-sex marriage ban if passed in April election

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate is taking a stance on the proposed ban on same-sex marriage to the Kansas Constitution tonight.

The proposed amendment will be on the April 5 ballot.

The resolution was originally introduced at senate last week.

If passed, it would mean the Student Governing Association would oppose the ban. Members can remove their names from the resolution.

Originally, the resolution was written to represent K-State students as a whole.

Sarah Laib, Senate Operations Committee chair, said it is fitting for SGA to take a stance on the issue.

"I think it's something that affects K-State students," she said. "We're here to represent our constituents."

Senate Chair Eleri Griffin said although it's not worded to represent students, it still does in a way.

"Whether or not we say it's just us, it speaks on what students want," she said.

At last week's meeting, there was a motion to not consider the resolution, which shows there is opposition in the senate.

"I've heard strong support and strong opposition," Griffin said.

In other business, changes in the SGA by-laws are being introduced into legislation.

Ben Procter, arts and sciences senator, said the main change is requiring leadership positions in senate to be elected senators. This would affect the positions of committee chair, senate chair and vice chair, faculty senate representative and intern coordinator.

"It simply says the leadership of senate should be elected by students," he said.

Procter said non-elected students will still be able to be on committees.

Some debate is surrounding whether the changes should be for the 2005-06 school year or for the 2006-07 year, because students did not know there would be a change when deciding whether to run for senate.

"Students deserve to be represented immediately," Procter said.

K-State struggles on offense in loss to Kansas

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE – The K-State Wildcats had the open looks – the ball just didn't go in.

In their 30th consecutive loss to No. 7 Kansas (22-4, 12-3) on Wednesday, the Wildcats (15-11, 5-10) got off to a sluggish start in the first half on offense and never recovered.

"I think offensively we had pockets of play where we just played poorly and lacked some poise," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "It was just really difficult, particularly in the first half. We couldn't get anything going and we were playing outside our scoring areas."

In the first half, K-State shot 38 percent from the floor on 9-of-24 shooting and scored 26 points. It was the Wildcats' lowest first half point total since scoring 19 in their Feb. 15 loss to Iowa State.

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey had the roughest first half for the Wildcats. Massey shot just 25 percent from the floor, on 2-of-8 shooting.

"I came up and missed some easy shots, shots that should have went in," said Massey, who finished with 17 points.

Sophomore guard Lance Harris, who came into the game shooting 41 percent from the the three-point line, also struggled in the first half, missing all three of his three-point attempts.

On the other end, Kansas shot 43 percent from the floor in the first half and hit 6-of-13 3-pointers to pull ahead by six at the break.

Things didn't get much better for the Wildcats in the second half.

"Shot selection really hurt us in both halves and the lack of execution hurt us in both halves," Wooldridge said.

Although K-State shot 40 percent from the floor, the Wildcats hit only 1-of-9 from beyond the three-point arc in the second half, while Kansas held steady, shooting 43 percent and hitting 3-of-9 3-pointers in the second half.

Sophomore guard Fred Peete, who hit the only K-State three-point shot in the second half, did what he could, shooting 50 percent from the field and scoring 11 of his 16 points in the second half.

"Offensively, we shot ourselves in the foot too many times," Wooldridge said. "We couldn't make up for not being able to stop Kansas from putting the ball in the basket."

K-State hangs with No.7 Jayhawks, loses by 7 on Senior Night in Allen Fieldhouse

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE – Though the odds were stacked heavily against them, the K-State Wildcats refused to back down in the most hostile of environments on Wednesday night.

But the Wildcats could not break through against the No. 7 Kansas Jayhawks on Senior Day and a night when Kansas celebrated Allen Fieldhouse's 50th anniversary, falling 72-65 in front of 16,300 in attendance.

"I was hyped like everyone else was, but I didn't get anything extra from playing in this game," said senior forward Jeremiah Massey, who had a team-high 17 points. "We were playing a great bunch of guys, and I knew that, but we couldn't get it to go."

When the Jayhawk advantage reached 12 for the second time in the second half, the Wildcats (15-11, 5-10) cut the Kansas lead to 47-41 at the 11:38 mark behind four free throws from sophomore forward Cartier Martin and a dunk by sophomore guard Lance Harris.

Then, the Jayhawks' National Player of the Year candidate took over.

Senior forward Wayne Simien responded to the Wildcat run with two quick buckets of his own to stretch the lead to 10, as the Jayhawks (22-4, 12-3) kept K-State at arm's length for the rest of the game.

"They hit some tough shots," Massey said. "Good basketball teams find ways to hit shots and they did."

In his last game in Allen Fieldhouse, Simien scored 18 of his game-high 25 points in the second half. The Big 12 and National Player of the Year

Kendra Wecker recorded the 50th double-double of her career, dropping in 26 points and pulling down 10 rebounds in No. 17 K-State's 80-53 win over Missouri at Mizzou Arena on Wednesday night.

Trailing 25-23 at the break, the Wildcats took control of the game with a 29-6 run in the first 10 minutes of the second half to break the game wide open at 52-34.

The Wildcats outscored the Tigers 57-28 in the second half.

After shooting only 30 percent from the field in the first half, K-State (21-6, 12-4) shot 59 percent from the field and 60 percent from beyond the arc in the second half.

After a Laurie Koehn 3-pointer to start the game, Missouri (10-17, 4-12) went on a 6-0 run, then, minutes later, followed with a 9-0 run to move its lead to nine points, its biggest of the game.

The Wildcats went scoreless for more than six minutes in the first half, but went on an 8-0 run to cut the Tigers' lead to one.

K-State tied up the game at 23-23 just before the half on Twiggy McIntyre's sixth point of the game. McIntyre finished with 11 points, the first time she finished in double figures in Big 12 Conference play.

Koehn finished with 17 points in the game, the fourth consecutive game she has finished in double figures. Koehn also moved into fourth place on K-State's career scoring list, finishing the game with 1,682 career points. Her five 3-pointers moved her to within two 3-pointers of passing Kim MacMillan for second place on the NCAA career list.

The win guarantees K-State at least the No. 4 seed and a bye in next week's Big 12 Tournament. If Baylor beats Texas Tech tonight in Waco, Texas, the Wildcats will claim the No. 3 seed.

NBA | Cheeks fired as Blazers' head coach

PORTLAND, Ore. — Maurice Cheeks was fired Wednesday as coach of the Portland Trail Blazers, who have dropped seven of nine games and are in danger of missing the playoffs for the second straight year.

Cheeks

Kevin Pritchard, the team's director of player personnel, was appointed interim head coach.

"It's a sad day," general manager John Nash said at a news conference. "Maurice Cheeks is a very, very good coach. He's an equally good person."

Cheeks, near the end of a four-year contract estimated at $12 million, was popular with the players and fans. But when the losses mounted, he was believed on the way out.

NFL | Rams sign outside linebacker Coakley

ST. LOUIS — The St. Louis Rams began restocking their most needy position on Wednesday, signing outside linebacker Dexter Coakley to a five-year contract.

Coakley, one of the smaller linebackers in the NFL at 5-10 and 236 pounds, was on the free agent market for one day after being released by the Dallas Cowboys on Tuesday. He would have been due for a $500,000 roster bonus if he was still on the roster on Wednesday.

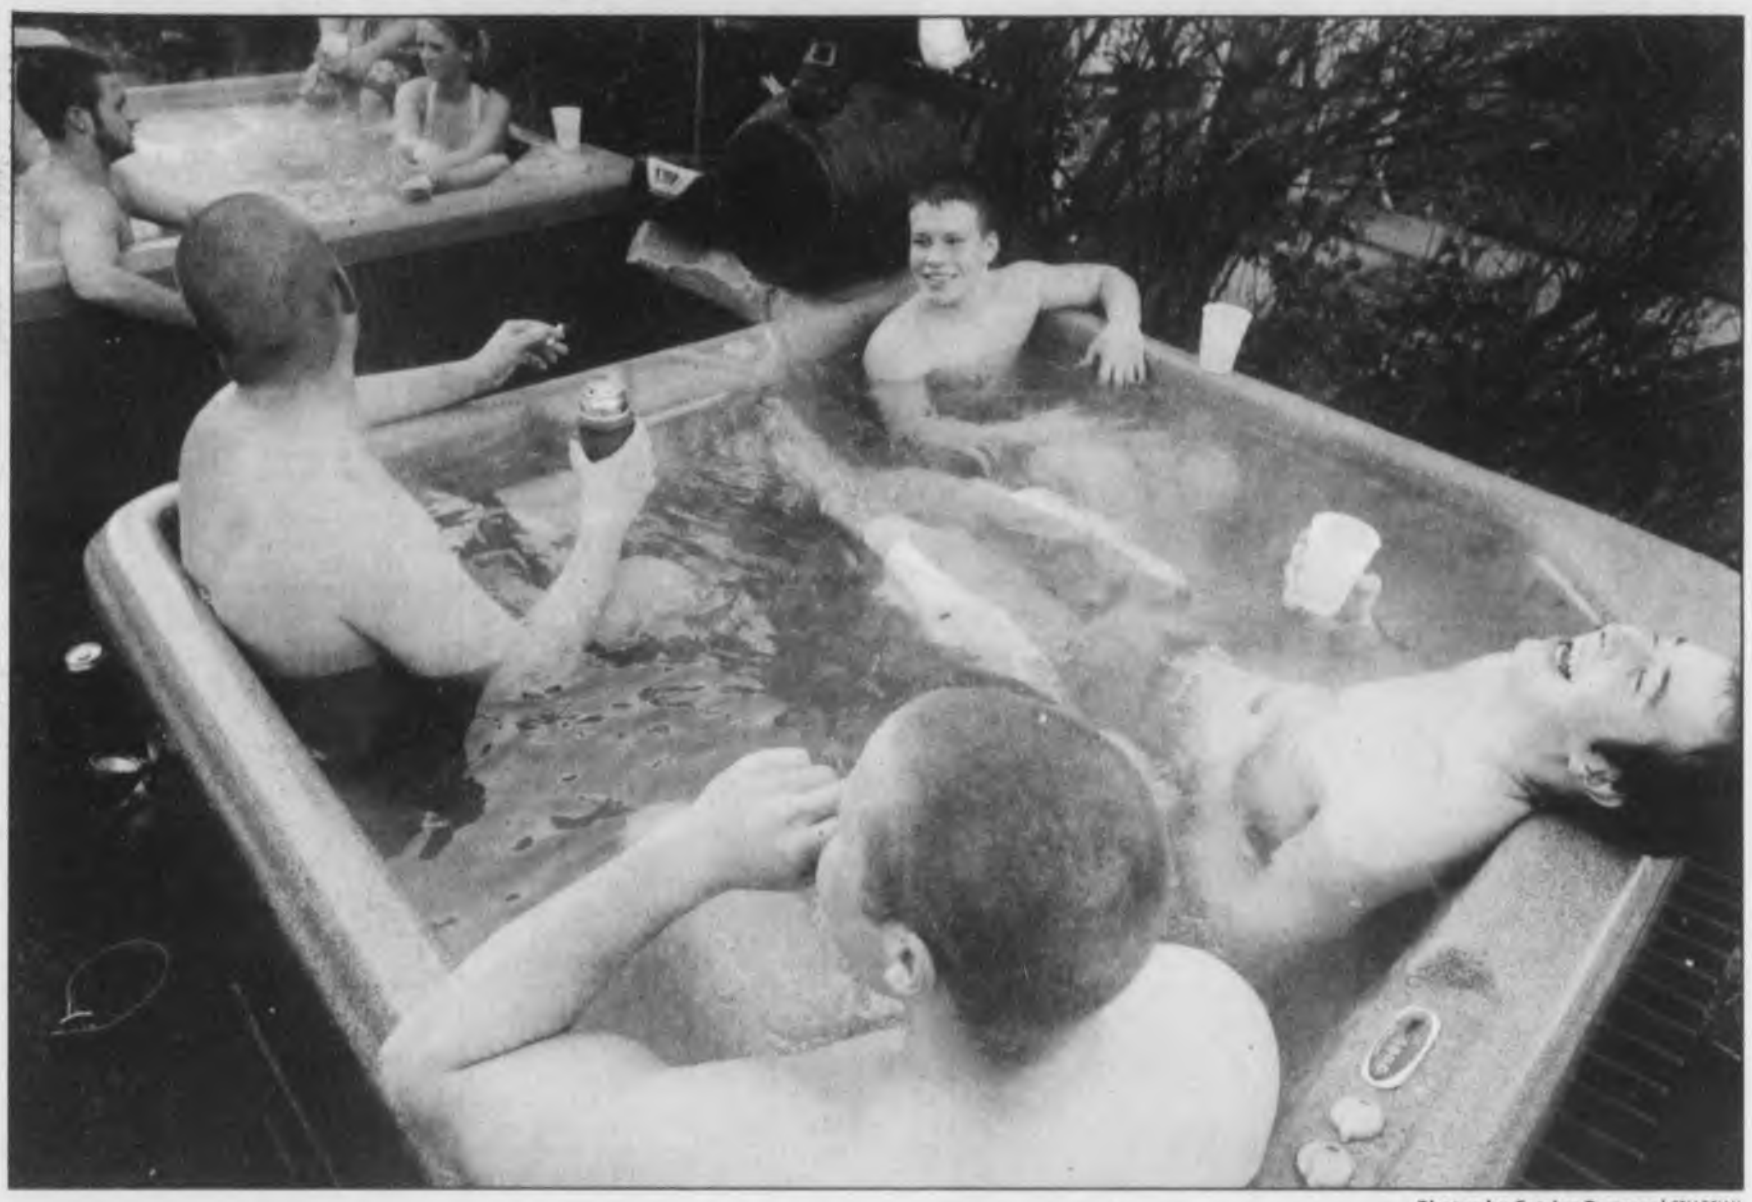
Coakley

Coakley, 32, is a three-time Pro Bowl player and played his first eight NFL seasons with the Cowboys. He started all 16 games at weakside linebacker last year and finished third on the team with 91 tackles, 60 solos, while sharing the position with second-year player Bradie James.

NFL | Moss officially becomes a Raider

ALAMEDA, Calif. — Randy Moss officially joined the Raiders on Wednesday, when Oakland completed a trade with the Minnesota Vikings for the star receiver.

Moss was scheduled to be formally introduced by his new team in an afternoon news conference, Raiders senior administrator Artie Gigantino said.



Moss

The Raiders were working to restructure his base salary of $7.5 million for next season into a more cap-friendly signing bonus to be prorated over future years.

The Vikings receive linebacker Napoleon Harris, the No.-7 pick in April's NFL draft and a late-round pick in the swap, which was completed a week ago but couldn't be made official until Wednesday.

The 28-year-old Moss will provide a huge upgrade to an offense determined to return to the high-powered vertical passing game of years past so preferred by owner Al Davis.

Brett Allred, junior in business management, Clay Glasco, junior in business management, Loren Peters, freshman in construction science, and Brock Lohrey, junior in accounting and finance, sit in a hot tub at 323 N. 15th St. Tuesday afternoon. Allred rents the hot tubs out as a business.

K-State student owns, operates hot tub business

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brett Allred is a junior in business management. With ingenuity, hard work and a little bit of money, he has done what many students can only dream of doing: managing and operating his own business.

Allred planned to have his own business since summer 2004. He created Captain Wildcat's Hot Tub Rental over the course of winter break 2004-2005.

"I saw that Wildcat Wave was no longer renting hot tubs, so I decided to make my own (hot tub rental) business," Allred said. "The market was definitely there."

Allred's business is the only one of its kind in town. During winter break, he bought a hot tub and a trailer.

In order to pay for the hot tub and earn a little extra money, Allred began Captain Wildcat's.

"I was going to buy Wildcat Wave's truck, but I didn't once I saw what condition it was in, so I decided to build my own," he said.

Currently Captain Wildcat's consists of one trailer with two large hot tubs. The trailer can accommodate 15 to 20 people.

In the middle of the trailer is a large, carved statue of a purple-suited pirate that was found at a garage sale, Allred said.

In order to get the word out, Allred has posted fliers in Aggieville and talked to the owners of bars about his business.

He also went around to the greek houses and presented his business to the social chairs.

One of the first places to rent from Allred was Tau Kappa Epsilon.

Chris Gigstad, sophomore in political science and TKE social chair, rented the hot tubs for a date party on a Thursday. TKE kept the hot tubs until Saturday night.

"I am in charge of setting up date parties and such, and I thought (renting the hot tubs) would be something new to try," Gigstad said. "I know everyone here had a really good time with them; it was a nice change of atmosphere at the house."

TKE has plans to rent from Captain Wildcat's again for "Beach Bash" in May. The house was very pleased with the service, Gigstad said.

"Brett does a really good job of staying in contact and checking to make sure everything works as you want," Gigstad said.

Rusty's Last Chance rented hot tubs for the opening weekend of NASCAR with the Daytona 500. Normally, Rusty's has a special breakfast for employees and regulars of the bar on the opening weekend of NASCAR, Preston Fox, manager at Rusty's, said.

"We decided to take it up a notch this year and get a hot tub," Fox said.

The employees chipped in money to help pay for the hot tub rental.

Rusty's also asked any other patrons who wanted to sit in the hot tub to throw in a few dollars to help contribute to the rental fee, Fox said.

"Brett was great and easy to work with," Fox said.

"We will definitely do something like that again; it was very fun."

Allred has many more reservations from fraternities throwing theme parties, such as Alpha Tau Omega's "Taugaritaville and Truckin' Party" and Kappa Sigma's "Bahama Mama Party". Allred also has reservations from businesses in Aggieville (such as Fat's Bar and Grill) and from residential houses that want to spice up their house parties.

"Everyone has a great time when they rent the hot tubs," Allred said.

You can reserve the hot tubs through Captain Wildcat's Hot Tub Rental by calling Brett Allred at (913) 221-3488.

Exes relinquish certain rights after breakup

LACEY STORER

Last year, my friend Anna was debating with herself about who she should take to one of our sorority's date parties.

She mentioned one guy who sounded like a good candidate, so I encouraged her to take him.

"The thing is, I think Greg expects me to take him, and he'll get mad at me if I take someone else," she told me.

The problem with this was that Greg was her ex-boyfriend.

To me, he had no say in who she could take to our date party.

It wasn't his right anymore.

Once you give up the title of boyfriend or girlfriend, you must give up certain rights.

There are some things that you just can't do anymore once the relationship is over.

Some are little rights. You no longer have the right to show up at your ex's house unexpectedly; a phone call first is now required.

You no longer have the right to expect rides to and from class or while running errands.

As an ex, the person is no longer expected to play the role of personal chauffeur.

You no longer have the right to voice your opinion on your ex' clothes, hair or friends unless asked.

Since these things no longer have any direct effect on your life, you don't get much of a say.

Then there are the big rights that you must give up, the ones that take some time to get used to.

I think the one that people will hang onto kicking and screaming the most before they let it go is the right to get mad when your ex hooks up with someone else.

It's one of the worst parts of breaking up. Hearing about or seeing your ex getting with someone new will most likely evoke feelings of anger and nausea.

You are allowed to feel a little sick, but you are not allowed to get angry.

You have the right to be jealous your ex is getting on other people, hurt because he or she is moving on from you or even disappointed in your ex' actions, but you don't have the right to be mad.

As hard as it is to admit it, you are no longer the partner and can no longer dictate how your ex interacts with the opposite sex.

I know it sucks when you see or hear about your ex getting on someone else. But as much as you want to get mad, you just can't.

Your ex isn't cheating on you, though you may feel betrayed.

Unless your ex is dating somebody you know or is flaunting it your face just to hurt you, you have no right to get mad.

As tempting as it will be to pick up the phone and yell at him or her for it, don't do it.

It can be hard to give up the rights that you once exercised so freely. But the bottom line is, your ex is now free to do what he or she wants.

If your ex wants to make out with somebody new every weekend, sleep with half the people on campus or even try batting for the other team, your ex can do it.

It's your ex' love life, and you no longer have a say in it.

week.

"They could tell Michael and I work well together," Groene said. "Michael and I will work well together to get results for students."

Burns said the issues in the pair's platform are feasible and also affect all K-State students.

"We have issues in our platform that affect all students," he said.

"We know we can accomplish all these things.

"We work hard and we have the experience needed to serve in the capacity student body president and vice president have to."

Groene said next week's election will be difficult.

"Tyson and Matt have run a strong campaign," he said. "They're going to be tough."

competing with Michael Burns and Grant Groene.

"(They) have ran a very clean campaign, and I'm excited that we are running against each other," Moore said. "I know Michael and Grant have the utmost respect for Matt and I and that respect is reciprocated."

Overall, Moore said they wanted to let students know that if elected, he and Wagner will work hard to make changes at K-State.

"Our focus is to give students more," he said, "and Matt and I will deliver on that promise."

candidate also grabbed a career-high 20 rebounds.

All this despite a sometimes suffocating Wildcat zone defense.

"He's a great player, so he found a way to get the ball and found a way to score," Massey said.

Coach Jim Wooldridge said overall, defense was a strong point for his team, as it held Kansas to 43 percent shooting, though the Jayhawks did hit nine 3-pointers.

"In both halves, I thought we really dug in defensively," Wooldridge said. "I think the zone helped us. Our gameplan was to take away the paint and the interior part of the floor. They had some guys make some shots, and we can live with that."

In all, the Jayhawks got 58 points from their senior foursome: Simien and guards Keith Langford, Aaron Miles and Michael Lee.

Although Massey led the Wildcats in scoring, it was far from the performance he wanted. Coming off a 28-point, 19-rebound effort on 10-of-13 shooting Saturday in a win at Colorado, Massey was just 4-of-14 from the floor and had five boards. He did hit 9-of-10 free throws.

"There was a lot of frustration," Massey said. "I couldn't make any shot. I totally take this loss on my back. I missed some easy shots – shots that should have went in."

The Wildcats as a whole lacked the offensive form of their last outing, connecting on 41 percent of their shots.

Multiple times in the second half, the Wildcats would appear to be grabbing momentum, only to have the Jayhawks take it back, usually at the free throw line.

Kansas hit 17-of-20 second-half free throws, including 10-of-11 from Simien.

The game opened with the Jayhawks jumping out to a 15-7 lead by the first media timeout. The Wildcats responded with a 7-2 run to cut the lead to three, but in a sign of what was to come, Kansas answered.

A Massey bucket cut the lead to two, but Simien's presence and 3-pointers from J.R. Giddens and Michael Lee helped the Jayhawks to a 32-26 halftime lead.

Kansas Coach Bill Self expected the contest to go as it did.

"We made some shots and got off to a bit of a lead, but the game pretty much went as scripted," Self said. "I knew it would be a grind-it-out game."

K-State received solid performances from sophomore guard Fred Peete and senior forward Justin Williams, as both hit double-digits in scoring.

Peete scored 16 on 6-of-11 shooting, and Williams had 10 points on 5-of-6 shooting with six rebounds. Peete also had six boards, five assists and five steals.

The game marked K-State's 30th-straight loss to Kansas dating back to Jan. 17, 1994, when the Wildcats upset the No. 1 Jayhawks in Allen Fieldhouse.

"We didn't play well enough to beat them," Wooldridge said simply.

K-State now begins preparation for its final game of the regular season. The Wildcats will take on Nebraska on Saturday – a game critical in terms of Big 12 Tournament seeding and postseason play for both teams.

GLOBALFLYER | Fossett plans on breaking record

However, gliding would only be used as a last resort.

Mission control 'began draining the wings' fuel storage tanks for usage and found the estimated remaining fuel was present.

Moore said after the early scare, the mission control team is relieved to have the record back in its grasp.

"Steve has very firmly set his sights on Salina and completing the circumnavigation," Moore said.

Fossett has already broken the record for longest distance without landing set by a B-52 bomber in 1962.

Now the risk lies in both Fossett's and the GlobalFlyer's stamina.

"Some things have gone in our favor the last few hours," Moore said Wednesday night. "He's still got a way to go. Steve and the aircraft are close to their limit of endurance."

Fossett has been taking short naps – keeping one eye on the controls. Only 20 percent of the flight will be spent in the daylight, making the journey even more challenging.

"I have to do four nights in two and a half days," Fossett said via satellite phone. "I am feeling tired."

Kevin Stass, mission control director, said there is evidence that short, frequent naps can reduce the symptoms of sleep deprivation. Fossett cannot move from his seat and is relying on milkshakes for energy.

"I'm not too cramped," he said. "I'm comfortable in my seat."

The record attempt has attracted not only international news media attention but public fascination all over the world. The first day of the flight, the GlobalFlyer Web site, www.globalflyer.com, received 2.8 million hits. On Wednesday, the site's traffic had increased to 76 million hits.

"That's fantastic," Fossett said as Moore told him the numbers. "It's great that Virgin Atlantic was able to generate interest. This is fun for all of us, not just me doing it."

Moore and Stass said the flight team remains cautiously optimistic for a completed mission.

"He's got a much better chance than we all thought earlier, but it's not a done deal," Moore said.

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Project Director Paul Moore speaks to Steve Fossett during a press conference to announce that Fossett will continue his flight as planned. At the time of the press conference, Fossett was passing Hawaii on his way across the Pacific Ocean.

Forensic scientists testify at trial

By Jesse Manning
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The prosecution focused heavily on DNA evidence throughout day 10 of the Thomas Murray first-degree murder trial, but witness testimony provided no breakthroughs in the case. All evidence presented was deemed inconclusive by the witnesses.

Murray, an English professor at K-State, is charged with murdering his ex-wife, Carmin Ross, in November 2003 at her home in Lawrence. The trial began Feb. 17.

It continued Thursday with a cross-examination of Terri Worley, a forensic scientist for the Kansas Bureau of Investigation. Worley examined up to 55 DNA samples from Ross's home, attributing all but one solely to the victim.

A single blood stain on a baseboard in Ross's first-floor bathroom contained unidentified male DNA as well as female genetic material.

The KBI was unable to match the unknown DNA to Murray.

"There wasn't enough information on who contributed the minor (part of the sample)," Worley said.

Angela Wilson, prosecutor, said that

Soldiers tried under Article 32

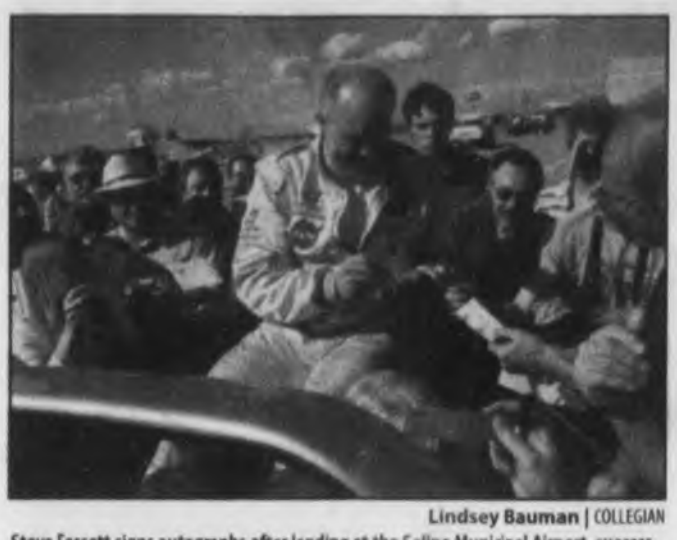
By Brigette Burandt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Article 32 hearing of two Fort Riley soldiers concluded Feb. 11 at Fort Riley after two days of testimony from the defense, the prosecution and 26 witnesses.

Sgt. Aaron Stanley, 22, and Sgt. Eric Colvin, 23, were charged in the deaths of fellow soldiers Staff Sgt. Matthew Werner, 30, and Spc. Christopher Hymer, 23, resulting from a shooting on Sept. 13, 2004.

An Article 32 hearing is the military equivalent of a civilian preliminary hearing. The purpose is to determine whether there is enough evidence to proceed to a court martial.

Maj. David Velloney, deputy staff judge advocate at Fort Riley, said that it could be several weeks until the investigating officer recommends whether or not there is sufficient evidence to go to court martial.



Donald Pojman, a coroner in Shawnee County, testified that both Werner and Hymer had traces of valium and methamphetamines in their systems.

Sam Robinson, assistant media relations officer at Fort Riley, said that Fort Riley does not plan to take additional measures to keep watch over soldiers in the future.

Additional charges against Stanley are for being absent without leave, adultery and violation of an order restricting him to the limits of Fort Riley.

GlobalFlyer pilot Steve Fossett lands after 67-hour journey around globe

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

SALINA, Kan. – It began with gusts of cold air and ended with showers of champagne.

GlobalFlyer Pilot Steve Fossett completed the first solo, non-stop flight around the world, landing at 1:50 p.m. Thursday in Salina.

"It's great to be back on the ground," Fossett said after landing. "It's one of the hardest things I've ever done."

The 67-hour, 23,000-mile journey started with a 6:47 p.m. takeoff Monday with frigid and strong gusts of air.

The mission was threatened Wednesday morning when controllers discovered the custom-built plane had lost 2,600 pounds of its original 18,100 pounds of fuel. The cause of the leak is still unknown.

"The mission hangs in balance, and it's touch and go," Paul Moore, project manager, said Wednesday. "Fuel alone will not take him to Kansas and around the world."

Fossett had to decide whether to land in Hawaii or continue on his journey to the West coast. But, after unexpected favorable tailwinds, the vessel landed safely with remaining fuel onboard.

The Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer, flown by pilot Steve Fossett, approaches the runway just before landing at Salina Municipal Airport to set a world record. Fossett, 60, survived on milkshakes and short naps.

After the plane was inspected by National Aeronautic Association officials to verify the record, Fossett taxied outside a hangar, and a crowd of eager reporters and spectators.

He hugged his wife, Peggy, and accepted a toast from a champagne bottle offered by Sir Richard Branson, founder of Virgin Atlantic, who financed the flight.

"It's been a magnificent trip," Branson said.

Fossett, 60, survived on milkshakes, sports drinks and water to maintain energy during the trip. He said he took two-minute naps while keeping one eye on the plane's controls.

After landing, he said he first wanted a nap and then a warm meal but didn't know what would be on the menu.

40 percent of primary votes cast Wednesday afternoon

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There were 3,986 votes cast, about 1,000 less than last year with 4,941.

About 40 percent of the votes for the primary election were cast after 2 p.m. Wednesday.

An e-mail was sent to all students at about that time reminding students to vote.

In 2003, 2,284 votes were cast in the primaries.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said the turnout was about average.

"It's pretty good for a primary turnout," he said. "Hopefully there will be more for the general election."

Last year, 6,241 students voted in the general election compared to 3,237 in 2003.

Presidential candidate pair Michael Burns and Grant Groene received the most votes with 1,688 votes.

ELECTIONS 2005

Voting for Student Governing Association general elections begins 8 a.m. Tuesday and ends 6 p.m. Wednesday. Vote at www.k-state.edu/elections.

Burns said the voter turnout was positive.

"Going into it, I really thought there would be a low voter turnout," he said. "I was just impressed with the primary turnout and I would hope to get more students voting in the general election."

Candidate pair Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner finished second with 1,072 votes.

Moore said more people voted than he thought would, because last year there were issues when Hayley Urkevich and Erik Ankrom won by three votes.

In 2004, second-place finisher Vicki Conner appealed the results claiming voter fraud and illegal polling places.

"Matt and I realized the turnout would probably not be as many as last year," Moore said.

"It seemed like last year we had a few issues with the elections process."

Start of presidential term still uncertain

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It is uncertain now when the next student body president and vice president will take office.

Last spring, Student Senate moved to amend the Student Governing Association Constitution to correct the problem, but it has yet to be ratified by the college councils.

The constitution did say the president, vice president and new senators would officially take office three weeks after the general election, but it was changed to five.

However, six college councils have to ratify the amendments for them to take effect.

The veterinary and architecture councils voted to ratify the amendments, but arts and sciences rejected the amendment.

Other councils haven't met yet to decide, she said.

"We just now realized it wasn't ratified," Student Body President Hayley Urkevich said.

Adam Kretzer, vice president of the Arts and Sciences Council, said the council didn't think the extension was necessary.

"We thought three weeks was sufficient time to get everything done," he said.

The bill went through senate before Urkevich was president, and there was just some miscommunication.

"We'll know in time whether it's passed or not, so that's not an issue," she said.

Senator Laura Wood, one of the authors of the bill, said it will allow senate to finish up some work.

"It's halfway through the second semester, and people still have some ideas that they want to finish up, and it gives them a little more time," Wood said.

Senate rejects gay marriage amendment opposition

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas' same-sex marriage ban amendment on the April 5 ballot brought debate Thursday night at the four-and-a-half hour Student Senate meeting.

Senate considered a resolution to oppose the proposed amendment.

Before debate began, there was a motion to postpone the resolution indefinitely.

Senator Nick Levendofsky said it was not senate's place to take a stance on the issue.

"I think we have no reason to come out and support this issue," he said.

In the resolution, similar amendments in Ohio, Utah and Michigan were cited to show the negative affects an amendment like this could cause.

"Why not do our homework. Why not got out and find the cold hard facts," Levendofsky said.

"We have to dig a little deeper on this issue."

Senator Jason Heaser said the fact that other states have seen unfavorable results from the amendments is important.

The postponement was defeated 23-24-3.

"We cannot assume that these negative ramifications will not happen in Kansas," he said.

"It's time for us to learn from other state's misactions."

In an effort to make the resolution less rigid, Intern Coordinator Ashley Boldt proposed amending the resolution to say concerned instead of opposed.

The amendment was defeated through a voice vote, and the resolution was defeated 17-27-5.

Diversity conference registration deadline today

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Apprentice" star Kwame Jackson will visit K-State next Friday for the Diversity in Action Conference.

Jackson, along with Mohammed Bilal from MTV's The Real World San Francisco and Joe Hernandez-Kolski from HBO's Def Poetry, will present different takes on the importance of diversity.

Thaddeus Murrell, conference chair and president of the Multi-Cultural Business Association, said he expects more than 1,000 people to attend the first-ever conference titled "Are you down with diversity?".

"Initially we didn't plan on it being this big, but it just grew," Murrell said.

Murrell said he thought to have a diversity conference for students after attending a diversity summit for faculty and staff members.

"I was surprised what it could do," he said. "I saw a lot of people who were like 'Aha, oh I see it. I didn't realize that before,' " he said.

Learning about diversity is important because many students may be in a different, more diverse environment after graduation.

"You look around, we are a predominately white campus," he said. "Going to a conference like this would enhance their level of multicultural competency, which in turn helps the world become a better place."

Jackson will be the keynote speaker for the event. His speech will address the main theme of the day, "Are you down with diversity?".

Bilal will present a 75-minute workshop, "12 steps to diversity."

Following the workshop there will be a panel discussing diversity in business with representatives from Varney's Book Store, Sprint, Cargill, DOW, Koch Industries and Accenture.

Hernandez-Kolski will have a 45-minute presentation, "Refried Latino Pride." He will address diversity from a Latino experience.

Before Jackson's keynote speech, there will be a dinner buffet.

A social will follow the party with a live deejay.

Those interested in attending the conference must sign up in the Office of Student Activities and Service by 5 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union.

Murrell said the event is something that nobody should miss.

"It's going to be an enlightening experience," he said.

TO THE POINT

Senators need to work out term details

Students have a Senate body as the bridge of information between its concerns and necessary change.

This system will fail if Student Senate does not start doing its part.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The most recent failure in the student government is the inability to ratify the constitution outlining when the new student body president and vice president, when elected, will take office. Only three of the six necessary councils have OK'd the amendments with elections only a week away.

After the polls close Wednesday and the election results are announced, it will still be weeks before the newly-elected president and vice president take office. How long after, though, is still uncertain.

The senate, which is representative of the student body, needs to fix problems like this as they come. Students elect the senators, councils, president and vice president to be its link to the Kansas Board of Regents with student concerns. Since the ratification to these amendments did not happen sooner and the process is only half over, the newly-elected members to the Student Senate will not voice our concerns. On the contrary, it will be last years' senators.

This is a matter of concern when elected officials fail to stay current on its own internal affairs.

With a matter that has been known about since last spring, it is Senate's job to fix the problem now.

CLASH OF THE COLUMNISTS

Sluts and saints

Flaunting body shows courage

My best friend always tells me, "If you got it, flaunt it."

ABBY HILES

Of course, this discussion between us occurs because I am three cup sizes bigger than she is.

Hey, if there is a part of your body that you are proud of, she says, you might as well show it off.

So she constantly throws low-cut shirts in my direction, and I, in turn, toss bare midriffs in hers. All I know is if I had a stomach like hers, rarely would I cover it up.

In "best friend" fashion, she fully supports my choice to show off the twins when we go out on the town.

And being young, empowered, confident women, we should be able to wear these clothes without criticism – especially criticism from our own gender.

If we wanted nasty comments about our clothes from people who obviously do not understand fashion, we would ask men for their opinions.

Revealing clothing is a way of life for girls in their early 20s. They have come into their own sexuality, and for the first time, they don't have to sneak out of the house for fear that their parents will veto their chosen outfit.

So to me, it isn't surprising to see a surge of scantily clad co-eds scampering around campus in the spring.

And why shouldn't they?

Most girls know their own bodies. If they have nice legs, then by God, they are going to put on that mini-skirt without shame. For my money, I can wear what I want.

Women should not let others dictate their own self-confidence.

If they feel comfortable, sexy or beautiful running around in a tube-top, so be it.

There are so many women out there who are self-conscious and anxiety-ridden about their bodies. Those women who aren't shouldn't be discouraged; they should be applauded for being so courageous.

Not that sometimes this isn't taken too far, because it is. In some aspects I agree with my sparring partner, Annie. Sometimes what girls wear verges on the obscene.

Let's be honest: wearing some of these clothes is a privilege, not a right.

The problem here isn't "slutty" clothes or the girls who wear them. The problem is jealousy.

Women are the most jealous creatures that have ever walked the earth.

If a friend loses a little weight, instead of supporting her, women make nasty comments behind her back.

Or what if a roommate wears something a little revealing? Instead of telling her how great she looks, girls will run to the other roommates or the guys across the hall and put her down.

Women cannot handle other women being more comfortable in their own bodies.

It's a shame, too.

Because all the energy we waste ragging on each other and putting each other down, could be channeled into something more constructive – like making fun of men.

Abby is a senior in English. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Showing skin can be disrespectful

The main reason I like cold weather is because it forces girls to cover up.

ANNIE LEWIS

As soon as the sun comes out, so do boobs and butt-cheeks.

Girls need to be aware of how uncomfortable their choice of attire makes other people feel.

During class, scantily dressed females easily distract some men. There are groups of guys who would be distracted by a pretty girl in a turtleneck and long skirt, but I'm not talking about them.

I'm talking about the men who don't want to be distracted, but are anyway, by girls showing everything but nipples in low-cut shirts. Let's not forget those jeans that show exactly what color of thong the girl is wearing – or not wearing.

Men are not the only ones distracted by poor fashion choice.

It is a human weakness for girls to want to judge other girls. Noticing one dressed like a prostitute makes that weakness a little easier to justify.

Last April in the Collegian, Nasrina Williams shocked K-State with her satirical view that women ought to be allowed to walk around topless. With fashion as slutty as it is today, it seems that many girls actually agree with her.

If this truly is a free country, and girls say that they ought to be able to dress however they want, where is the stopping point? There has to be a limit; some way to understand what is and is not acceptable.

It is unfortunate how difficult it is to find fashionable clothes that don't scream, "hooker."

Conservative shirts are easy enough, but try finding a pair of jeans that don't show butt cleavage; it's like finding a needle in a haystack.

Luckily, fashion trends are starting to turn more modest.

The Seattle Times reported in August that modest clothing is making a comeback. The hot look now is a more dressed up and put together look according to June Rau, Nordstrom's fashion director for its western region.

Tara McBratney, fashion director for CosmoGirl, said in the same article that girls always want to look sexy, and this season that sexiness will take a new form.

Appearing sexy can be as easy as a beautiful hairdo or clothes that flatter and still leave a lot to the imagination. Looking classy is a lot more admirable and respectable than showing everyone everything.

Feeling flirty and sexy is a lot of fun, but there is a time and place.

Girls should not try to pick up guys in their written composition class. Those wanting to bare it all should do so in Aggieville.

I was working in the mall last week, and a girl walked by with a miniskirt that just barely covered her bottom. The male customer I was helping made a very stunning and true statement: "My wife slept around on me, but at least she didn't dress like that."

Abby says, "If you got it, flaunt it." So go ahead and dress like an adulteress. Distract the boys and make the jealous girls scream with envy and disgust. In America, we can.

However, it is those who dress smart who easily earn respect and admiration.

How come there's not an article in the Collegian about people?

Claire Coggins, you need to be on The Facebook. There's some clubs worthy of your presence.

People really need to use their turn signals. It's not that hard to do.

I'm just wondering why anyone would put dual exhaust on a Jeep Liberty.

I'm voting for Pedro Sanchez, who do you think?

How many times do you come across a woman in a wheelchair in a drive-thru?

Does anybody think Delta Lambda Phi is going to hurt Fiji's recruiting numbers?

Hi, I'm a squirrel and I'm calling on behalf of all squirrels on campus, and we were just wondering if you could take your signs off our trees. Thanks.

To the guy who saw my bookbag was open and ran up and closed it for me, thank you so much and I think you're very cute.

I think if I were in Jim Wooldridge's shoes, I'd start finding some moving boxes.

I'm sitting at the K-State game in Lawrence, laughing at all the KU students who held up purple.

Why the hell is the game not on TV right now? I'm pissed off.

At the moment, ESPN News is on, but the game is supposed to be on. So, what's going on? Go Wildcats.

I was just wondering if when you join a sorority you automatically get a North Face jacket and boots or if you have to go out and buy them later.

I'm watching the KU-K-State game, and Justin Williams just caught the anti-suck virus.

SALINA, Kan. – Thousands of spectators had their eyes on the sky Thursday, anticipating the return of the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer in Salina.

Vehicles pulled to the sides of the roads and highways so passengers could get a glimpse of the plane.

They equipped themselves with binoculars, cameras, radios and scanners as they waited for pilot Steve Fossett to complete his attempt to fly solo non-stop around the world without refueling.

Salina residents Steve Howey and Brian Gaskill sat in a field north of the Salina Municipal Airport enjoying the sunshine as they waited.

"This is a good way to spend a beautiful day," Gaskill said.

Howey and Gaskell used a scanner to hear Fossett communicate with the tower at the airport so they would know the precise moment he would fly overhead.

"I always look for a reason to get out my gadgets," Gaskill said.

Both men said they became interested in the GlobalFlyer attempt when they heard it was departing from Salina.

"We visited the Web site a lot to keep updated," Howey said. "We probably visited it about 100 times. We were on it all the time."

Salina resident Rene Meyer said she was so excited for GlobalFlyer's return that she took a day off work.

"I knew if I went to work, I'd be sitting there regretting it and nothing like this ever happens in Salina," she said.

Meyer wasn't alone.

Young and old alike stood, sat and played outside while waiting for the plane to return. Salina USD 305 had hundreds of absences, as many parents took their children out of school to watch the history making event.

Eric Schwerdtfager, 12, missed school to see the GlobalFlyer return.

"I think it's cool that is coming back," he said. "It will benefit the city and it will make more tourists come because a historical event happened here."

Salina resident Kathy McClanahan agreed.

"It will put us on the map," she said. "Others will be able to see what neat people there are in Salina."

Lupe Contreras, Phoenix, said he was in town for his child's wrestling tournament and had heard about GlobalFlyer from the news channels in Phoenix.

Contreras said the team members and their parents walked over to a clearing by Interstate 135 from their hotel.

The kids played a game of football while they waited to see the plane fly overhead.

"It's just an awesome thing to bring kids to check this out," he said.

When the GlobalFlyer arrived at 1:50 p.m., Fossett was greeted by the thousands of spectators as they clapped, cheered and waved.

"It's a once in a lifetime event," Contreras said.

GlobalFlyer journey brings media mania

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

SALINA, Kan. – Spectators held their breath Monday when the GlobalFlyer finally lifted into the air.

When the plane took off down the runway, the crowd cheered in between shivering from the seemingly arctic wind.

However, as it climbed in altitude, the plane dipped toward the ground and those who have been waiting since January for the perfect takeoff conditions tightened with worry.

But pilot Steve Fossett pulled the plane back up and soon it was out of sight.

Earlier in the VIP lounge, city officials, former NASA astronauts and those lucky enough to get a pass, whispered rumors of appearances by John Travolta, Paris Hilton and Harrison Ford.

Those were all proven false, but the grandfather of the Hilton empire, Barron Hilton, meandered through the crowds in a bright blue suit.

After takeoff, the news media, including reporters from all around the world, prepared for a long road ahead.

The media was coordinated by the Virgin Atlantic team, identified by their fleece red vests. British accents seemed to be more common than Kansas slang.

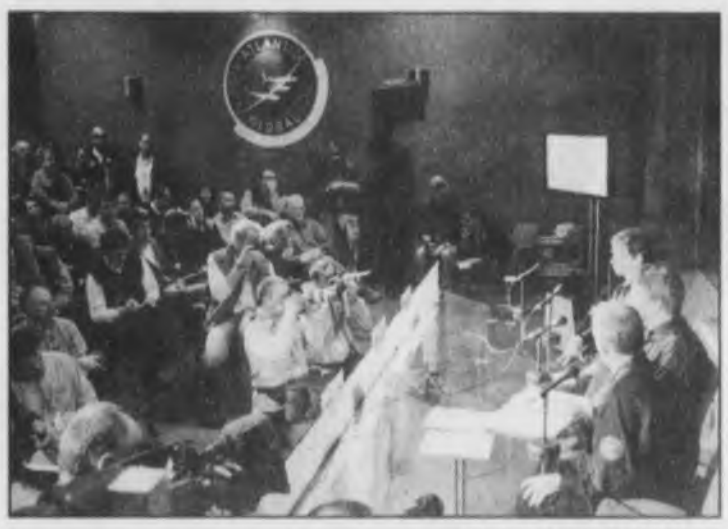
One Virgin Atlantic team member could be heard muttering insults about the eager American journalists.

Reporters and cameramen waited in the press lounge complete with a buffet for every meal along with a constant supply of sour Skittles, Gardettos, muffins, nuts and Goldfish crackers. A refrigerator full of Red Bull energy drink, along with a tap of Boulevard Wheat beer kept some going.

Mission control was just around the corner and resembles a mini-NASA headquarters. Press conferences were held several times a day with comments from the project leaders along with satellite phone conversations with Fossett.

The mission seemed to turn sour Wednesday morning when it was determined the plane had lost 2,600 pounds of fuel. When it turned out Fossett would still be able to land, accusations of an attention-getting conspiracy were thrown around.

The Virgin Atlantic team does crave the attention. Sir Richard Branson, legendary billionaire and founder of Virgin Atlantic, occasionally strolled through the lounge. Before takeoff, Fossett would casually chat with his wife at a table outside the press area. Cameramen caught on and encircled him in paparazzi-like fashion.



As the dream became a reality Thursday, nerves were high and the excitement could be felt in the mission control room, press lounge and in the crowds of thousands lining the runway.

As the plane began ducking beneath the clouds, Branson rubbed Fossett's wife's back while project manager Paul Moore paced.

The white object got closer and with one parachute released, the GlobalFlyer touched ground.

The runway erupted in cheers while reporters and cameramen raced to vans that sped past crowds to Fossett's taxi hangar.

The plane taxied, facing the hangar, and then flight team crews pushed the plane around to face the media so Fossett's exit would be perfectly photographed.

Members of the GlobalFlyer Mission Control team answer questions from national and international media during a press conference Wednesday night. Both print and broadcast journalists followed the GlobalFlyer during its time in Salina, Kan.

Spectators shouted "over here," begging for Fossett or Branson to shake their hands or pose for a picture.

K-State administration, including President Jon Wefald, shook hands with Gov. Kathleen Sebelius and waited for their chance to greet Fossett.

After the celebrations completed, a silver PT Cruiser convertible took Fossett on a journey through the crowd while high school marching bands played. Although he initially refused to sign autographs, he eventually complied.

Within an hour, the media circus and frantic celebration ended. Reporters filed their stories and news anchors edited video.

Instead of taking naps, the mission control team ate leftover spaghetti and laughed freely – their eyes still heavy with exhaustion and stress.

Within 24 hours, the cameras will be gone, the airport will return to normal and the Holiday Inn will remove the Virgin Atlantic decals from its front doors.

The journey, though, will be in the record books forever.

Top athletes will not compete

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Less than 25 percent of K-State's track and field members are scheduled to compete tomorrow at the Iowa State Last Chance in their last hope of qualifying for the NCAA Indoor Championships.

"We're going to give some kids an opportunity to run faster and submit their way into the NCAA meet," Head Coach Cliff Rovelto said. "Outside of that, we don't really have a lot of reasons to send people there."

Rest is the primary reason why most of K-State's top athletes will be withheld from competing in tomorrow's meet in Ames, Iowa.

"You can't come off of a meet like (the Big 12 Indoor Championships), do anything this week, and have anything left in the tank for nationals," Rovelto said.

Junior Coby Cost, who won the weight throw at the Big 12 Indoor Championships last weekend in Lincoln, Neb., said he is glad to have Saturday off.

"I'm pretty sore," Cost said. "I'm going to take it easy and try to get healed up so I'll be ready to go for nationals."

Freshman middle-distance runner Morgan Bonds is one Wildcat who will travel to Ames this weekend.

Bonds, from Hutchinson, Kan., became the first K-State true freshman to win a Big 12 title after she won the 600-yard run last weekend.

Bonds' final chance to qualify for the national meet will be in the 800-meter run, since the 600-yard run is not offered at nationals.

Bonds said she likes the 600, but she may be better at the 800 since she has run it more.

"The 800 is probably my race," Bonds said. "I'm looking for a fast time – hopefully fast enough to qualify for nationals. The competition should be pretty good because all of those people who are about where I am are trying to get into nationals, so it should be pretty intense."

Bonds said she is looking forward to running with her teammate, senior Lysaira Roman-Del Valle.

Roman-Del Valle is one of 12 Wildcats to provisionally qualify for the national meet, joining the four who have automatically qualified.

"We will definitely be in the same heat," Bonds said. "I'm excited (to run with Roman-Del Valle) because we run every day in practice, and she is really experienced."

Bonds said the last time the two raced, Roman-Del Valle came out on top.

"She kicked my butt pretty good," Bonds said. "Hopefully I'll be able to stay a little closer to her this time."

Bonds said she likes racing at Iowa State because of its 300-meter track, which is larger than conventional 200-meter indoor tracks.

"It feels like you're outdoors," she said. "The turns (at Iowa State) are not as tight as other tracks."

Bonds said her season will not be a total loss if she is unable to qualify for the national meet.

"I'd be a little disappointed because I think I should be able to (qualify), but I won't be extremely disappointed because I never even expected to be this far."

Other Wildcats who will compete this weekend include redshirt freshman weight-thrower Laci Heller, sophomore hurdler Lisi Maurer and junior sprinter Rashaad Allen.

Those Wildcats who have qualified will conclude their indoor season at the NCAA Indoor Championships March 11-12 in Fayetteville, Ark.

Wildcats set to take on the Terriers

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team is taking the field today in its first home weekend action of the season.

K-State (4-5) will take the field at 3 p.m. today against the St. Francis Terriers at Tointon Family Stadium.

This will be the Terriers first action of the season. Last year, they finished the season 12-30.

St. Francis is returning three starters and seven pitchers from last year's team. They are coached by Frank DelGeorge, who is 405-475-6 in 24 seasons as head coach.

K-State is looking to bounce back from a Tuesday loss to the Creighton Bluejays.

K-State dropped its home opener against the Bluejays 8-3.

Despite the loss and a 4-5 record K-State is looking to find itself and start playing as a team.

"We haven't been playing as hard as the teams we have been playing against," Coach Brad Hill said. "We must work as a group to get wins and that's what we want to do."

Sophomore first baseman Jared Goedert agrees with Hill.

"We need to start playing for each other instead of individually," Goedert said. "We

Hanging by a thread

Wildcats still alive for NIT

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Saturday could be the last time the K-State men's basketball team takes the floor at Bramlage Coliseum this season, and the final opportunity many fans will get to see senior forward Jeremiah Massey up close and personal.

The key word is "could."

When the Wildcats (15-11, 5-10) take on Nebraska (14-12, 7-8) at 12:30 p.m., it will be a game that might seal K-State's postseason fate.

"It's the biggest game of the year," Coach Jim Wooldridge said.

The Wildcats, already owning their highest win total since the 1998-99 team went 20-13, are also trying to make postseason play for the first time since that squad made it to the National Invitational Tournament (NIT).

Barring a remarkable run to the Big 12 Tournament title next week, the Wildcats' lone hope for postseason play is the NIT.

And if K-State is selected for the NIT, there is a possibility – however slight – the team could host a first-round game, giving Massey and a senior class that also includes Justin Williams and Travis Canby, one more chance to suit up on their home floor.

A K-State win over the Cornhuskers would give the Wildcats six conference wins, and in the eight-year history of the Big 12, only Baylor in 1996-97 failed to make the NIT or NCAA Tournament with at least six league wins and a winning record.

The Wildcats are coming off a 72-65 loss at Kansas on Wednesday, in which Massey led the team with 17 points, but he hit just 4-of-14 shots.

"Hopefully, we can come out and have a better performance than we did (Wednesday)," Massey said.

Nebraska provides a tough obstacle for the Wildcats. The Cornhuskers are one of the hottest teams in the Big 12, having won three straight, with victories over No. 8 Oklahoma State, at Iowa State and a 70-55 win over Colorado on Wednesday.

The contest also will have a big say in what seed the Wildcats will get for the conference tournament.

Right now, the Wildcats sit in the No. 10 spot, trailing Missouri by a game for No. 9. A win by K-State and a loss by Missouri against Kansas on Sunday would create a tie, which would go to the Wildcats based on their 2-0 record against the Tigers this season. The Wildcats would then draw the conference's No. 8 team in the first round.

"We're confident we can go win against Nebraska and, hopefully, we can go into the Big 12 Tournament strong," Massey said.

Senior day

- Jeremiah Massey is nearing another milestone in his already illustrious two-year career at K-State. Last season's Big 12 Newcomer of the Year, is 27 points shy of cracking the top 25 on the K-State all-time scoring list.
- Justin Williams enters Saturday coming off arguably his best performance of the season. The senior had 10 points and six rebounds against Kansas.
- Travis Canby, a 6-foot-10 forward, has seen action in seven games this season. Canby is 19-of-36 from the floor (53 percent) for 48 points and has 72 rebounds in 74 game appearances.

Massey, Williams, Canby need support from fans with cheers, purple, wigs

MATTHEW GIRARD

About this time last season, the K-State men's basketball team honored its graduating senior class by giving them framed jerseys and about five minutes of face time before their last game.

The fans were supportive, and it was a nice little ceremony, but not one that brought about chills or something to tell my grandkids about.

On Saturday, the Wildcats will honor another senior class as Jeremiah Massey, Justin Williams and Travis Canby suit up for the last time in Bramlage Coliseum against the Nebraska Cornhuskers and hopefully the ceremony will be a little more eventful.

I hate to compare anything to Kansas, but on Wednesday night, I witnessed something that sent chills through my body and gave me a night to talk about for years.

The Jayhawks sent their vaunted senior class of Wayne Simien, Aaron Miles, Keith Langford and Michael Lee off in style.

Cheerleaders showered them with flowers, the fans went nuts every time their names were called, teammates stood and clapped in appreciation and the entire building was decked out in blue.

Each senior even had a chance to speak to the crowd after the game.

It wasn't just some ceremony – it was an event.

I know, I know. The K-State senior class has not accomplished what those Jayhawk seniors have, but they still deserve our best on Saturday.

Massey has given many memorable moments in his short time here, with his stare downs, dunks and his Oscar-worthy flops. He is easily the best player we have seen during the Jim Wooldridge era, and he should get some additional face time.

I mean, who doesn't want to hear the man address the crowd?

I'm not talking about two hours' worth, like the Jayhawks, but with just a few words, Massey could turn the crowd into a frenzy.

Although Williams has not had a stellar career at K-State, he could at least give us an explanation for the 'fro' incident and where his 10-point, six rebound game against Kansas came from.

Who knows, maybe an emotional crowd will pump up the Wildcats enough to carry them deep into the Big 12 Conference tournament.

Everyone coming to the game should wear their purple, bring signs and if they can swing it, wear a wig that matches were favorite seniors' haircut.

Let's send the seniors off in Wildcat style.

MLB | No one elected to Hall by Veterans Committee

TAMPA, Fla. — Gil Hodges and Ron Santo were again denied by voters on the Veterans Committee for the Hall of Fame, raising doubts whether anyone can gain election from that panel.

Hodges and Santo fell eight votes shy of the necessary 75 percent, with each appearing on 52 ballots (65 percent) in totals announced Wednesday. Tony Oliva (45) and Jim Kaat (43) were the only other players to be picked on more than half of the 80 ballots.

It was the second straight shutout by the revamped committee, which includes all living members of the Hall and its writers' and broadcasters' wings, plus one holdover from the old Veterans Committee.

NFL | Draft will not be held at Madison Square Garden

NEW YORK — After 10 years at Madison Square Garden, the NFL Draft is changing venues.

On Thursday, the NFL announced that the Jacob Javits Convention Center will host the 2005 draft, which is scheduled for April 23-24. It will mark the 31st straight year the draft will be held in New York City.

Citing a dispute with Cablevision, which owns the Madison Square Garden and opposes the building of a new stadium for the New York Jets on the west side of Manhattan, the league sought a new draft location for the first time since 1995. Prior to the Madison Square's reign, the draft had been held at the nearby Marriott Marquis.

TORONTO — An investment firm and a sports advisory company reportedly made a joint proposal to buy all 30 NHL teams for as much as $3.5 billion.

The two Boston companies were invited by NHL commissioner Gary Bettman to present the highly unusual offer, the Toronto Star and Globe and Mail reported Thursday. Bain Capital Partners LLC and Game Plan LLC made their pitch Tuesday in New York to NHL owners, whose season has been shut down by a lockout.

Game Plan chairman Robert Caporale confirmed to WBZ radio in Boston that the companies had offered more than $3 billion.

CFB | Kobe Bryant, accuser settle assault case

DENVER — With a terse news release and an even terser court filing, the sordid sexual assault case against Kobe Bryant that gripped the nation abruptly ended with an agreement that ensures the NBA star never goes to trial for what happened in a hotel room two years ago.

Bryant

Few experts believed the civil lawsuit would ever be heard by a jury, saying it was unlikely that Bryant and the 20-year-old woman who accused him of raping her relished the prospect of having to divulge potentially embarrassing, intimate details in a courtroom.

Terms of the settlement were not released. Law experts said the agreement probably spelled out financial penalties for revealing any details.

A two-sentence statement faxed to The Associated Press by Bryant's attorneys said only that the matter had been resolved "to the satisfaction of both parties."

NFL | Owens undergoes surgery on left ankle

PHILADELPHIA — Wide receiver Terrell Owens was among three members of the NFC champion Philadelphia Eagles to undergo successful offseason surgery, the team revealed Thursday.

Owens, who put forth a heroic effort in the Eagles' 24-21 loss to the New England Patriots in Super Bowl XXXIX on February 6, had the screws in his left ankle removed by Dr. Mark Myerson in Baltimore.

Owens suffered a broken fibula below the right knee and ligament damage to the ankle after being tackled from behind by safety Roy Williams in a December 19 game against Dallas. Three days later, he had two screws and a plate inserted in the ankle by Myerson.

Mother's wishes should be considered

It was the mother of all fights – and it just so happened that it was with my mother.

AMY PRESTON

A few weeks ago, I received a phone call from my mom that started with a lecture and ended with a dead phone line.

All because I shrugged the idea of spending money for printed napkins.

Don't get me wrong. My mom is my best friend and my number one support system. But ever since I told her I was getting married, she has sworn to make my wedding the biggest event in Hutchinson, Kan., since those natural gas explosions in January 2001.

Add the fact that she and my father took out a loan and are working 50 hours a week to pay for this shindig, and I find myself feeling twinges of guilt each time I don't agree with her so-called "traditional" ideas.

These fights between my mom and I began just hours after my fiancé Jack and I announced our engagement. I remember waking up the next morning to a loud voice telling me I should book the church.

The fights ceased for a while, but since Thanksgiving break, battles in the War of the Wedding are once a month.

In December, I didn't know the exact way I wanted to decorate the church. In January, our florist quit.

Which brings us to February – the month where my mom dropped the atomic bomb over printed napkins.

She's stubborn. I'm stubborn. And we both fight alike.

Now, though, I'm looking to sign a peace treaty.

Carley Roney, editor in chief of The Knot magazine, offers advice in dealing with moms who have gone out of control with wedding details. On The Knot's Web site, www.theknot.com, Roney suggests to compromise with the parental units, especially if they're forking over the dough.

"It's absolutely true that it's your wedding and you should do it the way you want," she writes. "But keep in mind that it's a big day for your parents, too. Your mom in particular has probably been dreaming about your wedding day for even longer than you have."

Point taken.

My mom has been dreaming about my wedding since the day her gynecologist told her I was going to be a girl 22 years ago.

I, on the other hand, have dreamt about my wedding day since the sunset of July 30, 2004 – when Jack proposed to me standing next to the slides at the Salt City Splash Aquatic Center in Hutchinson, Kan.

So I'm turning in my armor. That's right, mom, I'm letting you win. It's not worth fighting over what will be the event of our life times.

Oh yeah, mom, one more thing. I'm ordering those printed napkins this weekend, so can I have some money put into my checking account? Thanks.

Bush plan could hurt farmers

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

President Bush proposed a reduction in farm subsidies for the next year that could significantly affect Kansas farmers.

Bush's plan for the next fiscal year limits federal agriculture payments.

Brad Lubben, K-State agricultural economist, said an individual currently can receive as much as $360,000 per year, but with Bush's new proposal, an individual would be limited to a maximum of $250,000 per year. That amount also takes into account the benefits of up to three entitlements.

Decreasing grain and dairy payments is also in the proposal.

"They will calculate the payments in grain and dairy and reduce them by 5 percent," said Joe Arata, assistant professor of agricultural economics.

The effects of this possible cutback will affect both large corporate farms as well as smaller family farms.

Lubben said producers of select agriculture are given payment subsidies. Which crops are produced and how much is produced helps to determine whether a farm is eligible for government benefits.

"A lot of small farms don't qualify because of their size and what they grow," Lubben said. "This is not something that is explicit to large farms, but they do grow more and, as a result, get more money."

The amount of financial support a farm will receive also depends on the way the commodity's money is distributed.

"Certain payments are fixed amounts while others are tied to production," Lubben said.

In Kansas, large farms in the southwest could be affected more than the rest of the state, because the farms are larger and because of the specific crops they produce. Lubben said he predicts that if payments are "hard and fast, it might only hit 3 percent of the farms across the state and 10 percent of the farms in the southwest."

Lubben said if the proposal is passed, farmers will have to give up some payments that they were used to getting and reorganize their business to find ways to more efficiently use their smaller subsidized payments. He also said there is enough flexibility within the farming programs that the 5-percent payment reduction probably won't directly have a significant effect on the mix of crop growth.

The proposed cutback could produce other effects.

"In the short run, [the cut] will be taking money from people's hands," said Ted Schroeder, professor of agricultural economics.

In the long run, land prices and values might shrink, he said.

Another long-term effect of the cutback could involve local communities. Schroeder said if farmers' budgets were limited, their personal spending could decline, which would influence rural commerce. Eventually, because of the condensed funds, the farm machinery industry, such as tractors, irrigation systems and combines, could suffer as well.

"If this actually passed, Kansas farmers will be forced to tighten the belt a little bit in order to survive on smaller government payments," Lubben said. "By no means is this [Bush's proposal] a certainty."

April 15 last day to claim 2001 tax refund

By Zachary T. Eckels
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than $2 billion has yet to be claimed in old tax refunds from 2001, according to the Internal Revenue Service.

The IRS's Web site, www.IRS.gov, estimates 17,100 of these individuals are from Kansas. These Kansans could claim a total of $16,433,000.

Susan Spain, CPA at Varney & associates, CPAs, LLC, said the opportunity to claim this money is disappearing.

"If you have not filed your 2001 return, and do not file your income tax return by April 15, 2005 you will have lost your opportunity to get a refund," she said.

Spain said students are likely to be in the group of people who haven't filed tax returns.

"There are people who have part-time jobs and don't think they made enough to get a refund; so they forget about it," she said.

A reason many choose not to claim these taxes is because the cost of having someone do their taxes takes away the benefit of getting the refund, said Gary Edwards, CPA at Redding's Accounting & Tax Service.

For example, a student might go out and earn $2,000. From this, $100 might be withheld for taxes. If it cost them $100 to have someone fill out their taxes, it doesn't make any sense for them to do it, he said.

If students earned less wages than the standard deduction for 2001, they didn't owe taxes and can get the money back, she said.

Anyone who hasn't filed a return for 2001 needs to, Spain said.

"There are a lot of people out there who ignore filling because they think it's too much work, and usually they have the easier returns," she said.

Students write in Pedro, Kip from 'Napoleon Dynamite'

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pedro received some votes for both student body president and vice president.

Signs and sidewalk chalk around campus contain the message "vote for Pedro." The message comes from the 2004 film, "Napoleon Dynamite."

Pedro Leite, assistant professor for computer systems technology at K-State-Salina, received nine votes for president and two for vice president with various running mates.

"I was surprised," he said. "I don't even know who my running mates are."

Leite said he didn't know why he received the votes at first, but he's seen the movie.

"I see some students walking around wearing shirts saying 'vote for Pedro,'" he said.

Elections Commissioner David McCandless said the votes were cast because of the movie.

"I'm sure that was the consideration," he said.

Rob Caffey, director of mediated education, said when students want to write-in a candidate the voting program brings up a search.

The search brings up all students that could be the typed in name.

"The particular reason that he showed up is the eID system shows him as being a student," Caffey said.

Students have to be enrolled as a full-time student in order to to be qualified to be president or vice president, but since it searches all students, unqualified candidates can be written in, McCandless said.

Leite said he is a graduate student, but he isn't taking any classes. He is just doing research work, so he is an enrolled student.

Leite was not the only write-in candidate voted for from the movie. Kip Butler, graduate student in veterinary medicine, received two vice president votes with Leite as his running mate.

Caffey said he is not concerned about the votes for Pedro affecting the election.

"I guess it's cute," he said. "It doesn't appear to me it's adversely affected the outcome."

Class performs during lunch hour

By J. Scott Bowman
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Instead of eating lunch on Thursdays in the K-State Student Union, your car or at home, catch a play and eat your lunch in the Purple Masque Theatre.

After all, that's the gift that the Theatre Department gives K-State each year, said Charlotte MacFarland, associate professor in theater.

"First off, it's free, and it's open to everyone," MacFarland said.

"Normally you're not supposed to eat in a theater, but here you can come in and chomp away. Bring over something from the Union, the sub shop or whatever.

"Instead of watching TV at the Union, you can come watch a short play. And the Purple Masque is a small, intimate theatre; you're on top of the actors, but you don't have to worry if you have to open packages or wrapping for your meal."

LunchBag Theatre is a theater class that MacFarland teaches, and is available every spring semester. She said the class started about 15 years and was started by Lew Shelton, who retired last year.

MacFarland said the class has eight performances eaeh semester, and the students who attend the class must complete beginning, intermediate and advanced acting as well as beginning directing. She said students also must have the instructor's permission to enroll.

"This class and performances are every year in the spring," MacFarland said.

"So we pretty much have to reinvent the wheel each year. We generally have new actors, directors and we have to make sure we get word out that we have shows."

LunchBag Theatre is one of the best classes on campus, said Peter Burghart, senior in theater. He said the class is the best experience for an actor or director.

"It allows people to direct and act and we use some student scripts," Burghart said. "For the directors and actors, you get to do an entire show, you're not limited to just parts in shows. You get to stretch your roles some."

Burghart said the LunchBag Theatre technically has no budget, but they still get to pull props and costumes from the theater department.

Having no budget was a challenge, said Debbie Swann, junior in theater and English and director of the past performance.

"We've got old furniture, books, lamps – pretty much whatever you want," Swann said.

"But when you do a play, you keep your fingers crossed that we have something that will fit the show.

"Like the last performance, it was supposed to take place in the 60s, but all of the furniture was modern. And as far as costuming, it's whatever you can find or borrow from friends and family."

Swann said she also enjoys the class, because she gets a lot of experience out of it.

"This was the first play that I directed from start to finish," Swann said. "I really enjoyed it, and that's because I want to direct. I'd like to get a masters of fine arts and direct, but this was great because I'm comfortable with the people I'm working with. They're willing to work, and if we have disagreements, we can converse as friends. And that's something I'm sure I wouldn't get in the professional world."

Burghart said there are several reasons someone should come see LunchBag Theatre.

"First reason is that if you like plays and theater, you get to see good actors doing good work," Burghart said.

"The second is – Hell, it's free. The other shows on campus are good deals, but this is even better because it's free.

"And it's something to do, it's different than TV or a movie. And if you have a boyfriend or girlfriend, and your classes are done by noon, you can have a free date, all you have to do is bring food."

Governor sends plan to Legislature

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius has proposed $50 million in health care reforms to address sharply rising medical expenses across the state.

The proposals, which will reach the Kansas Legislature in the coming weeks, focus on providing health care education programs and better medical care to Kansans, while driving down costs within the health care industry.

Funding for these new reforms would come from an increased tax on the sale of cigarettes and other tobacco products.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said streamlining the current health care system would decrease the amount of money spent on paperwork and record-keeping. Currently, thirty percent of Kansas health care costs are administrative.

Carlin said programs for making people aware of health reforms are beneficial.

"Implementing health awareness programs would help people learn to take better care of themselves, and utilize health care effectively," Carlin said.

This knowledge could eliminate many practices that increase expenses for health care and insurance providers, such as visiting the emergency room for minor medical problems and overusing prescription medications.

The proposed reforms would also focus on the needs of 250,000 Kansans who are currently uninsured. Insurance coverage would be extended to an additional 40,000 children and 30,000 low-income working parents throughout the state. New insurance options would also be made more affordable to assist small businesses in providing health benefits to its employees.

"Students would have better access to health care services and insurance, not just at Lafene, but any health care service."
Lannie Zweimiller
DIRECTOR OF LAFENE HEALTH CENTER

Lannie Zweimiller, director of the Lafene Health Center, said the passage of the governor's reforms would also be good news for the students attending K-State.

"Students would have better access to health care services and insurance, not just at Lafene, but any health care service."

GLOBALFLYER | Fossett lands plane in Salina

"I haven't thought about it," he said. "It won't be a milkshake."

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius flew in for the landing to greet Fossett and the record-breaking team.

"I think it's a terrific way to feature our state," she said. "We have a rich aviation history."

Interest in the mission overwhelmed the GlobalFlyer Web site, which had 87 million hits Thursday. In comparison, the 2004 Olympics' Web site experienced only 18 million hits on an average day.

K-State President Jon Wefald said it was thrilling to experience record-breaking history firsthand.

"I just have seen what it was like to see Charles Lindbergh in Paris," he said. "This really is a 'Ripley's Believe It or Not.' It's another one of those superhuman happenings."

In 1927, Lindbergh flew the tiny Spirit of St. Louis across the Atlantic Ocean to Paris.

Fossett, who was unable to stand for the journey, walked gingerly from the plane to speak with reporters and greet his fans. But he said it wasn't the adoration that motivated him, but his own sense of adventure.

"I would do these things if nobody was paying attention," he said.

Wefald, though, said the publicity is good for K-State, whose aviation students helped with mission control.

"I think it's going to put our program on the map," he said. "I am sure you'll see an increase in applications next year."

Fossett, who has circumnavigated the globe in a hot-air balloon, said he finally achieved one of his greatest ambitions.

"I think it is the most important aviation record yet to be done," he said.

Did you know?

Record breaking

Fossett broke three world records and created a new one during his 67-hour flight that landed Thursday afternoon.

- Fastest trip around the world without stopping or refueling.
- Longest distance over a closed circuit without landing.
- Farthest distance without landing. The former record was set by a B-52 bomber in 1962.
- First solo, nonstop flight around the world. The first nonstop, global flight was made by Jeana Yeager and Dick Rutan in 1986.
- To verify a world record, the National Aeronautic Association must send information to the Federation Aeronautique International for approval. The certification takes six to eight weeks.

need to start doing what we can to help the team win."

Goedert is leading the Wildcats offensively with a .448 batting average, which is currently fifth in the Big 12. He is third in the Big 12 with 13 hits, has a .552 slugging percentage, a .528 on-base percentage, six RBI's and four walks.

Goedert has yet to make an error defensively and has 81 putouts and five assists.

"I have been seeing pitches well so far," Goedert said. "Overall, I have just been hitting the ball better."

The Wildcats have also been getting some solid pitching production from some of its starters.

Junior Adam Cowart is tied for the Big 12 lead in ERA with a mark of 0.00.

Currently there are four others at the top, but Cowart has thrown the most innings at 16.0 and has the most strikeouts at 14.

During his last outing Cowart went 8.0 innings. He struck out 10 hitters while not walking a batter. Cowart retired the final 12 batters he faced and scattered six hits, all singles.

Cowart threw 100 pitches on the night, 77 were strikes, and only fell behind in the count to two of the 28 batters he faced.

"I've just been focusing harder and spotting up on my pitches," Cawart said. "I've also got some good defense behind me."

In 16 innings this season, Cowart has yet to give up a run or a walk, has struck out 14 batters and has given up just one extra base hit.

K-State's bullpen has helped keep the Wildcats in the game so far this year.

Through nine the bullpen has a 0-1 record with a 2.33 ERA in 27 innings of relief. They have given up nine runs, seven earned, on 19 hits while walking seven and striking out 19.

Five relievers have ERA's of 0.00.

Senior Mitch Walter is getting the start for the Wildcats today.

Walter is currently 23rd in the league in ERA at 2.65.

Hill said this team has the talent, but they need to to focus and win some games.

Cowart could not agree with coach more.

"We're struggling and to win we are going to have to play better," Cowart said.

"We are looking to come out and win three games this weekend."

The team will return to action at 2 p.m. Saturday and 11 a.m. Sunday, all games against St. Francis at Tointon Family Stadium.

MURRAY | Forensic evidence presented to jurors

the goal of the defense's vigorous cross examination of Worley was to discredit her particular DNA evidence in order to show that the defendant was not in the victim's home.

The KBI sent the unidentifiable DNA sample to a private DNA research laboratory, ReliaGene Technologies Inc., in New Orleans.

Dr. Sudhir Sinha, founder and president of ReliaGene, testified as to the results of his company's test on the unidentified DNA. During the prosecution's examination, Sinha said the results were inconclusive due to an anomalous peak in a specific genetic locus in the DNA.

During cross-examination by the defense, Sinha could neither confirm nor deny that Murray's DNA was present at the crime scene.

"He is not excluded," Sinha said, but his company's quality control procedures precluded any definitive implications. The abnormal genetic spikes also revealed more than one male presence in the unidentified DNA, a fact presented by defense attorney Bob Eye.

"It's also possible that (the DNA) is somebody else's, correct?" Eye said.

"Oh yes," Sinha said. While Murray's DNA matched up to nine of the 11 genetic loci in the male DNA found on the baseboard Sinha said that within a reasonable degree of scientific certainty, the DNA is not identifiable.

A difference of only one genetic locus calls the evidence into question.

Testimony from Stan Heffley, forensic scientist for the KBI, and Kevin Winer, a senior trace evidence analyst for the Kansas City, Mo. Police Department, was inconclusive as far as the prosecution's attempts to tie Murray to the crime scene.

While hair, blood and clothing fibers were analyzed in detail, none clearly indicated that Murray had contact with Ross on the day of the murder, Winer said.

A conference on admissible evidence that began before the jury entered Thursday morning continued as testimony in the afternoon. The chimney in Murray's Manhattan home had been searched in February.

The prosecution alleged that items such as acetate fibers and a scorched magazine photo found within the chimney and ash-box meant that Murray may have used the fireplace to burn evidence.

The defense dismissed the allegation as too broad and frivolous as well as being a late addition to the trial.

Pedro Irigonegaray, one of Murray's attorneys, said the prosecution's evidence is not adding up to substantive charges.

"I think it's a good day in that there is absolutely no physical evidence belonging to Mr. Murray that can be placed at the scene of the crime," Irigonegaray said. "None of Ms. Ross's blood or fibers are in his house or car."

Group raises $100,000 for St. Jude Children's hospital

Up 'til Dawn to celebrate with lock-in at Rec Center tonight

By Adam Hanks
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Free food, local bands and a carnival-like atmosphere will greet K-State's Up 'til Dawn participants at its final event at 6 tonight.

Between 500 and 700 Up 'til Dawn participants are expected to to show up at the Peters Recreation Complex to be locked in until 6 a.m. Saturday.

Up 'til Dawn is a campuswide philanthropic organization that benefits St. Jude Children's hospital, a children's hospital and research center in Nashville, Tenn.

The organization raises money for the hospital by writing thousands of letters to family members, friends and coworkers, requesting donations. This is the third year for Up 'til Dawn at K-State.

"We are passionate about helping children who are suffering from new diseases, and their families, and we want to let them know we are supporting them," said Lindsay MacAdam, senior in mass communications, who is involved with Up 'til Dawn's public relations.

Dan Patrick, junior in mass communications, who is the program's executive director, said the final event serves multiple purposes.

"It's to commemorate all of the parents and kids for when they had to stay up all night during chemo treatments," Patrick said.

In addition to raising awareness about St. Jude Children's Hospital, the event is a reward for a job well done by the participants.

This year, nearly 1000 participated in K-State's Up 'til Dawn and raised around $100,000 by sending out more than 16,000 letters. Though this is short of their $200,000 goal, and less than the nearly $150,000 raised last year, K-State students have still raised more than any of the nearly 300 different college Up 'til Dawns across the country.

Patrick said the drop in numbers is typical among other groups this year, and believes it is partially because the same participants call the same people each year.

"We had a lot of veteran volunteers this year, and they've been calling the same people for three years now," Patrick said.

Despite the lower numbers, the group will still be celebrating a job well-done this evening. The event tonight will feature many different events, from poker tournaments to miniature golf. The K-State Classy Cats will be performing, as will the local bands "Another Roadside Attraction" and "12th Street."

Several families of the patients who have benefited from contributions made by Up 'til Dawn programs will also attend the event.

Pell Grant eligibility will tighten

By Kerry Fischer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many K-State students may lose their Pell Grant money next year due to President Bush's new revision. Others may gain money.

According to an article in the New York Times, President Bush said in his budget for fiscal year 2006, he plans to increase Pell Grant ceilings by $100 annually over the next five years. Under this plan, the maximum Pell Grant amount will be $4,550 by 2010.

Larry Moeder, director of admissions and student financial assistance, said the revision to the Pell Grant system comes from the Bush administration changing the state tax tables to try to make them more even from state to state. As a result, it will cause tighter eligibility.

Moeder said when the federal government calculates a student's eligibility for Pell Grant money, it looks at a variety of factors, including parents and student income, parental and student assets, family size, number of children in college and the federal and state tax amounts the parents and student pay. The maximum estimated family contribution amount is $3,850, so if a family can contribute that amount or less, the

No debate for SGA candidates

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There will be no formal debate between presidential candidates this year.

KSDB-FM 91.9 usually holds the debate. Chris Swick, news director, said he was unable to arrange the debate.

"I haven't had a chance to set anything up," he said. "I was going to try, but I wasn't able to get anything coordinated."

Swick said he had thought about having the debate at noon today, but that was never official.

Instead of a debate, 91.9 will have presidential candidates Michael Burns and Tyson Moore on air at 5:30 p.m on "Political Pork."

Andrew Latham, program director, said the on-air debate will be an informal debate. He is the co-host of the show, along with Nick Arena.

"We just kind of felt there really wasn't too much of an interest to have a really formal, structured one," he said. "I think that will allow people to get a handle on the issues well enough to make an informed vote."

Latham said they will discuss the candidates platforms and more.

"We're going to talk about platforms, but we're definitely going to talk about a bunch of other issues," he said. "Just so that people or students can get a feel for who they really are and not just based on their platforms."

Moore said a formal debate would allow them to reach out to more students.

"I really feel that a debate would have encouraged informed voting," he said.

Burns said he also wished there would be a debate.

"I definitely think it is unfortunate, but we will continue to find ways to take our message to students," he said.

Students celebrate time spent serving St. Jude's Hospital

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Mitch Jost was 4 years old, he was diagnosed as having a Wilms' tumor, which is a tumor of the kidneys. For treatment, he was sent to St. Jude Children's Hospital in Memphis, Tenn.

Even though he had to have chemotherapy for a half a year, Jost, now 16, said his time at St. Jude was a positive experience.

"You wouldn't think hospitals are positive and are a bad place, but St. Jude is different," Jost said. "Not only do they cure you, but they give you hope for a better life."

About 1,000 K-State students participated in Up 'til Dawn, which helped raise money for St. Jude to help medical research for children like Jost.

The students were rewarded for their participation in the program with a celebration from 6 p.m. Friday to 6 a.m Saturday.

The celebration included games, magicians, prizes and a special performance by the Classy Cats.

"This is our way of giving back to the students," Dan Patrick, executive director for Up 'til Dawn and junior in advertising, public relations and Spanish, said. "This is our way of saying thank you very much for helping out and taking hours out of your busy schedule."

Alysha Lewis, senior in family life and community service, organized the event. She said she wants people to become more involved in Up 'til Dawn.

"I hope people come back and learn what St. Jude is and take on a better position and help raise money for next year," Lewis said.

Throughout the year, students have been writing letters and making Christmas cards to help raise money for research at St. Jude.

"A lot of the way we get money is through the letter-writing campaign," Patrick said. "We have participants have letter writing parties. We had a DJ there and food and prizes and stuff."

In the program's three years at K-State, it has been ranked No. 1 in the nation in money

Students testify in professor's murder trial

By Sarah Rice
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jurors in a K-State professor's murder trial heard testimony Friday about footprint and blood stains found in the victim's home.

Thomas Murray, an English professor at K-State, is accused of killing his ex-wife Carmin Ross in November 2003.

She was stabbed at her home in Lawrence.

Murray is on leave with pay from his tenured position at K-State.

Mike Van Stratton, lab director at the Kansas Bureau of Investigation, testified that a blood stain found on Ross' bathroom sink was first identified as coming from a shoe.

But prints from shoes taken from Murray as evidence did not match.

"Neither of these two shoe prints match anything, to your knowledge, belonging to Mr. Murray," defense attorney Pedro Irigonegaray asked.

"That's correct," Van Stratton answered.

He also said the sink stain could have been made by a wavy fabric pattern.

Other blood stains analyzed from a table drawer, carpet samples and magazines indicate a struggle, Van Stratton said.

Detectives sprayed Leuco Crystal Violent, a chemical solution that enhances blood stains on carpet sections, which revealed another footprint on carpet near the bathroom.

It was concluded the print resembled a work boot, different from the print on the sink, but no boots were ever admitted into evidence.

Defense attorneys are trying to establish that more than one person was in Ross' home at the time of the murder.

The pattern and size of the blood stains also indicate that Ross was struck many times while in different positions, Van Stratton testified.

He pointed to photographs of blood transferred from a blood-covered object to the blue carpet.

"It shows there is a lot of movement here, consistent with a struggle," Van Stratton said.

He also testified that blood splatterings also showed that Ross was two feet above the living room floor when her attacker beat and stabbed her repeatedly.

Also testifying Friday were three students who were present in Murray's English class the days before and after Ross' murder.

Jessica Grant, senior in English, testified that in class on Nov. 14, 2003, the day following the murder, Murray winced as he put weight on his hand and explained to the class he received an injury while playing "octopus" with his daughter, Ciara.

Grant said it was not uncommon for Murray to mention his daughter if it was relevant to classroom discussion.

Shanna Hajek, also a former student of Murray's, testified that it appeared Murray was grading the tests as they were handed in on Nov. 12, 2003.

In interviews, Murray told police he was grading tests at his home the morning of the murder.

He later changed his alibi to say he had driven toward Topeka to shop in Paxico, Kan.

He said he changed his mind and turned around on Interstate 70 to come home to Manhattan.

Linda Susan Carrigan testified that after being nervous about her performance on her test, she asked Murray to grade her test immediately after handing it in.

After finishing the test he was grading, it took two or three minutes to grade hers, Carrigan said.

GlobalFlyer completes mission

GlobalFlyer pilot Steve Fossett waves to the crowd as he climbs out of the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer Thursday.

Despite a large fuel leak, GlobalFlyer pilot Steve Fossett completed the first solo non-stop flight around the world Thursday afternoon in Salina, Kan. The 23,000-mile trip took 67 hours and began Monday night. Fossett survived the four days in air with two-minute cat naps and milkshakes.

BTK MAKES COURT APPEARANCE

Sedgwick County District Judge Greg Waller read 10 charges against BTK suspect Dennis Rader Tuesday, as Rader appeared in court via satellite for the first time since he was arrested last week.

Rader

All 10 charges are first-degree premeditated murder for the killing spree between 1974 and 1991.

A preliminary hearing date has been set for March 15, but officials believe it will be postponed to allow more time to prepare.

BURNS, MOORE MOVE ON

Presidential and vice presidential candidates Michael Burns and Grant Groene swept K-State student primary elections Wednesday, collecting 1,688 votes. Candidates Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner, who gathered 1,072 votes and came in second place, will compete against the winning pair during general elections. General elections are Tuesday and Wednesday.

COMMANDMENTS CONTROVERSY

The displaying of the Ten Commandments in governmental places was questioned Wednesday when the U.S. Supreme Court heard arguments on the constitutionality of having a Ten Commandments monument on the Texas Capitol and posting the laws in a Kentucky courthouse.

If the Supreme Court finds the postings unconstitutional, thousands of similar displays could be removed nationwide.

SYRIA BACKS OUT

President Bashar Assad announced a pullback of Syrian forces to the Lebanese border on Saturday, but he did not address the international demands that he completely withdrew Syria's 15,000 troops.

The president also failed to respond to President Bush's demand to have Syria's troops and intelligence agents out of Lebanon before its May parliamentary elections.

MARTHA'S OUT OF JAIL

It only took three hours for Martha Stewart to leave Alderson Federal Prison Camp in West Virginia, nicknamed Camp Cupcake, and reach her New York City estate Friday, when she was released from the women's federal prison where she spent the past five months.

Stewart

Stewart had the weekend to set a meeting with a probation officer and receive her electronic anklet, which begins her five-month home detention.

JACKSON TRIAL CONTINUES

The Michael Jackson child molestation case continued as the teenage victim's sister took the witness stand Friday.

While on the stand, the accuser's sister began to cry as she said her now 15-year-old brother went from someone who wanted to be hugged and kissed to being quiet and withdrawn.

She also went into detail about how Jackson treated her brother, saying she saw him frequently hug and kiss her brother.

Veterinarians face shortages

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN

Vets important in preventing possible outbreaks

By Amy Bolton
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A shortage of food–animal veterinarians across the United States could have drastic effects not only on the care of food animals, but on the nation's food safety.

Peter Chenoweth, a professor and Coleman chair of food animal–production medicine at the College of Veterinary Medicine, spoke at a national meeting at K-State two years ago on the problem.

Chenoweth has written an editorial on the issue, and surveys have been done at Ohio State University and in Australia.

"All of these came to the same conclusion: that there is a worsening shortage of veterinarian practitioners in the food animal area," Chenoweth said.

A food animal veterinarian primarily works with animals that are raised for consumption, such as cattle, swine or sheep, said Dan Thomson, section head of agricultural practices at the College of Veterinary Medicine.

An equine veterinarian works with horses, and a companion animal veterinarian works with smaller animals, like cats and dogs.

The shortage of food–animal veterinarians could be a problem not only in the area of food safety, but also in the outbreak of a foreign disease like foot-and-mouth disease or in the event of bio-terrorism attacks on the nation's food supply, Chenoweth said. If there was a major outbreak, he said it could be catastrophic regionally and nationally.

One cause of the shortage of food animal veterinarians is that fewer people attending veterinary school are coming from farms and rural areas.

Another is the increase in the need for and numbers of companion animal veterinarians.

"There's been such a demand for companion animal veterinarians in big cities that it's kind of taken over," Chenoweth said.

The shortage is a problem for rural areas because there are more food animals but fewer food– animal veterinarians. Food–animal veterinarians already practicing in rural areas are having a hard time recruiting young veterinarians to join their practice, Chenoweth said.

Guy Kiracofe, professor of animal science and pre-vet club adviser, said rural veterinarians are an important part of the rural community.

"We're working to get people to understand the advantages of a rural veterinary practice," Kiracofe said.

Steps are being taken to promote the area of food animal veterinary medicine and to encourage people to enter the practice.

The federal government has recognized the shortage of food–animal veterinarians by setting up the National Veterinary Medical Services Act. Chenoweth said this act provides for loan prorate for veterinarians who go to rural and under-served areas to practice, but the act has only been passed and has not yet been funded.

Chenoweth said the College of Veterinary Medicine is working hard to get students interested in entering the area of food animal practice. The college is working with rural veterinarians to speak with students about the benefits of becoming a food animal veterinarian.

More externships, which are similar to internships but generally last only a couple of weeks, are being set up with rural veterinarians.

Seniors uninterested in elections

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last week's primary elections gave students a chance to voice their opinions for the future of K-State, but many seniors did not vote.

Crystal Henry, senior in early-childhood education, said although she didn't vote, she meant to.

She said the campaigning of the candidates influenced her decision.

"I met some of the candidates and wanted to vote for them. They were quality candidates," she said.

Jacob Engle, senior in secondary education, said the reason he didn't vote was because of lack of technology and help on how to vote.

"I didn't know where to go (to vote) and I didn't have a computer," Engle said.

Kristen Deardorff, senior in speech pathology, said she kept forgetting to vote.

"Every time I thought about it, I wasn't at a computer," Deardorff said.

Penny Bolton, senior in kinesiology, agreed with Deardorff.

"I wanted to, but I forgot," said Bolton.

Zachary Payne, senior in english and secondary education, said unclear campaigns was his reason for not voting.

"I don't know any candidates or platforms," Payne said.

Michelle Radatz, senior in elementary education, said she didn't vote because she is student teaching and not on campus.

"I'm not on campus so I'm thinking different than a student these days," said Radatz.

David McCandless, elections commissioner, said the Office of Mediated Education tallies the voting.

"The Office of Mediated Education has a system set up, it's all electronic and online and it's tallied electronically," McCandless said.

He went on to say the reason he voted was because he was looking to K-State's future.

"It's important to ensure that K-State has a good future. It's important to take responsibility for that," he said.

Ben Fenwick, senior in political science, agreed.

"I think just as much as I'm concerned about KSU now I'll be concerned about it in the future and my vote ensures that KSU will go in the right direction in the future," Fenwick said.

Fenwick said a good reason for seniors to vote is to think about how seniors want K-State to represent them.

"I think it's important because as we go out in the real world, what happens at KSU will represent us 10 years from now," he said.

Chalking violations not strictly enforced

By Joanna Rubick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Although regulations dictate candidates cannot chalk sidewalks within 30 feet, there have been several buildings where the rules have been broken.

Enforcement of this regulation only happens when the Division of Facilities complains, Elections Commissioner David McCandless said.

McCandless said the Office of Student Activities and Services can't check all of the campus for chalking.

"It would be a ridiculous exploit," he said. "We have decided to only mess with that if Facilities let us know."

Loleta Sump, facilities support-services manager, said individual campus buildings generally report the violations.

"Usually it's people in the building that call us and report an infraction, and we go out and look at it," Sump said. "There's not anyone out there whose specific job is to police that union."

This semester four candidates have been cited for chalking violations, but only one was for the 30-feet violation.

Former presidential candidates Jeremy Parker and Dustin Schirer chalked on the steps of Anderson Hall, and Facilities washed it off.

McCandless said after those initial violations, which happened in the first week, chalking was allowed and nothing else has been reported.

"We're running smooth now," he said.

Sump said it used to be there were only specifically designated areas where chalking was allowed, not just for elections but also any chalking throughout the year.

The designated areas were Bosco Student Plaza and five specific sidewalk areas that are highly traveled, she said.

However, students did not stick to these areas, Sump said.

That is why the 30-foot rule began, she said. Chalking also is prohibited on places not meant for pedestrian travel.

"It was the compromise: allowing people to continue to sidewalk chalk, but yet respecting the buildings," Sump said.

She said if people walk on chalk, it will go away rather quickly, which is good.

When a violation is reported, she said facilities works with OSAS to make sure everything is done correctly.

"We work very cooperatively together on those different things," Sump said.

TO THE POINT

Informal debate not a good replacement

It is unfortunate that there will not be a presidential debate this year.

In years past, debates have given students insight into the candidates they will elect to be their next student body president and vice president.

KSDB-FM 91.9 provided a service to students by being the host of the debates, not only for the general elections, but also before the primaries.

Not having the debates this year because there is not much interest is not an excuse.

By having a debate, students' interest could, and probably would, rise.

A debate allows the candidates to reach out to more students, so students can put a name with a face.

While having an informal debate on air is a good idea, it is not a replacement.

Students will only get to hear the candidates' voices on-air, whereas a debate would be open to all students.

Students could also listen to them on the radio or read about it in the K-State Collegian the next day.

It gives students the opportunity to inspect various sources to get their news, but more importantly, the opportunity to witness what candidates have to say.

Debates provide a format for the not-so-prepared speeches and answers candidates are eager to give. It allows students to see what the candidates are really like.

91.9 should have been on top of things and kept their tradition alive for hosting the debate.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Attorney general's request for abortion records unreasonable, unnecessary

JACI BOYDSTON

After looking over all my tax information last weekend, I realized that I owe the state of Kansas $36 for underpayment of taxes.

I've decided to send my check to Topeka with a note attached: "Please see to it that none of my tax dollars benefit Phill Kline's horribly intrusive, underage abortion witch hunt."

Our attorney general has decided the best way to halt the practice of abortion is to seek out detailed medical records for girls younger than 16 who had abortions and for women who had late-term abortions.

According to a Feb. 25 Associated Press report, Kline is seeking the women's and girls' complete, unedited medical records, which include "the patient's name, medical history, details of her sex life, birth control practices and psychological profile."

Details of their sex lives and psychological profiles? What exactly does Kline plan to do with these private medical records – pitch a mini-series idea to Lifetime?

Actually, no. Kline said, "I have the duty to investigate and prosecute child rape and other crimes in order to protect Kansas children."

A reasonable person might wonder how dredging up sensitive information about a woman's sex life and birth control practices for the purposes of right-wing invasion of privacy accomplishes anything at all, let alone "protect Kansas children."

It doesn't.

While I'm sure this is hard for Kline to comprehend, some girls under the age of 16 do in fact have sex. Sometimes, they make irresponsible decisions that send them to abortion clinics. This is all sad, but how does snooping through these girls' medical records make things better?

It doesn't erase the poor decisions they made. It doesn't stop any other young girls from having sex. Unless Kline has some kind of cool new technology I'm unaware of, it certainly doesn't make unborn babies any less aborted.

Even if Kline's "investigation" uncovers an incidence of child rape, the victim had reasons of her own for keeping the incident quiet. That's her decision to make, and it's not Phill Kline's or anyone else's job to go against her wishes.

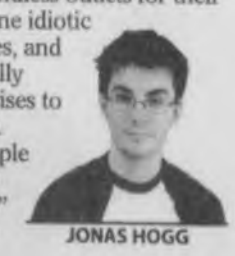
Kline's aim in targeting women who had abortions after the 22nd week of their pregnancies is somewhat more reasonable. Late-term abortions are lamentable procedures that are illegal for a reason.

Although I fail to see how requesting the birth control practices and psychological profiles for women who had the illegal procedure will help Kline "prosecute crime," his goal in punishing those involved in the practice is certainly reasonable. Too bad his investigation doesn't end there.

Kline isn't trying to protect Kansas children; he's trying to further his pro-life agenda, and he's using a really dirty tactic to do it. By saying something is "for the children," politicians can get plenty of mild-mannered citizens behind virtually any goal. There are right-wing folks who would support drowning puppies if it were "for the children."

For politicians like Kline with worthless agendas destined for the trash heap, playing the children card is often the only way to garner public support.

Abortion is a legal medical procedure, and the government does not have the right to demand these personal medical records. No one would think Kline reasonable if he requested detailed psychological profiles for every Kansan who had a root canal last year.



If Kline wants to get tough on crime, he should focus on the women who had late-term abortions and leave girls alone.

Look deeper than appearances, stereotypes to find diversity

JONAS HOGG

It never ceases to amaze me how people find endless outlets for their ignorance. One idiotic myth explodes, and another equally idiotic one arises to take its place.

Many people who claim to "know better" are often the largest propagators of this hooey.

After all, why get any old idiot to start a stereotype when you can get an idiot with a Ph.D to do it instead?

Not long after I was stationed in Fort Riley, a friend of mine and I went to a coffee shop to grab a drink. As we enjoyed a nice game of chess, we were treated to a lovely speech that an elderly gentleman was giving a group of visitors at the next table.

The bullpucky coming out of this man's mouth concerned Fort Riley, what a wretched place it was and how he wished it would close to "cut back on the riff-raff." Apparently, he was unaware that some riff-raff were sitting right next to him.

I've experienced other such pleasantries during my tenure as a soldier here, ranging from the ever popular "Riley rat," to being ignored at restaurants, to attempts to goad me into fist-fights.

But it would be unfair to claim that soldiers are the only sufferers of prejudice. I recently had several conversations about the "cookie cutters" that make up greek organizations.

"They all dress the same and do the same things." Such generalizations are neither healthy nor constructive. It makes an assumption that someone has met all or even most of the greeks on campus and found them all to be the same.

Simply because someone has the same appearance and mannerisms as someone doesn't make them the same. After all, we tend to form groups with people whom we have similarities with.

Beyond that, if you were to take two people from the same greek house who, for some reason, wore the exact same thing to school every day, you would still discover an entire library worth of differences.

With all the banter about "diversity" that goes on these days, there is a striking absence of true diversity in our daily discourse.

To assume that someone is diverse because they look different belittles the fact that two people from the same small town in Kansas might have more differences between them than people from different countries.

If you think the terms "Riley rat" or "sorostitute" are less morally offensive than racial slurs, then you are seeking to justify that you are a prick who can only find some measure of worth by demeaning others.

If you cannot be bothered to say 10 words to someone before summing up their entire personality, life story, political views and future career, then it would be beneficial to all if you would stay at home and save the rest of us from your measly little ideas.

The Tao Te Ching says, "He who knows does not say; he who says does not know."

So the next time the local idiot tries to tell you about the innate inferiorities of a group of people that you've never met, just close your eyes and imagine a whole line of Klansmen nodding in unison.

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian, nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

If you really want to help K-State students save money, I've got three words for you: public textbook lists.

I am the great Cornholio. I need TP for my bunghole.

Lacey Storer's name in the journalism world should be Captain Obvious.

Actually, now I think I'd rather procreate with hot dog. Sorry.

I think corporate taxation has to be the hardest class on campus, because I've never heard of another guy getting shot down by a girl studying for something else.

If Jessica Simpson went to K-State, she'd be a Tri-Delt. If Natalie Portman went to K-State, she'd be a Pi Phi.

It's 11 o'clock, and yes, I am still in Senate, and yes, I am calling this in from the bathroom in the Union. Please help. Save me if you can.

Taco Bell: their drive-thru is open late, but you're going to wait, and wait and wait.

We went to KFC, and they're out of chicken. What's up with that?

Who do we call and complain to when the Fourum's mailbox is full?

I go to KU, and this is for those guys who thought it'd be cool to chalk our campus: I'm glad you had fun, because while you were writing "KU sucks" out by Wescoe, we were busy kicking your ass on the basketball court.

I don't think Delta Lambda Phi is gonna hurt FIJI's recruiting numbers. I think the dorms are gonna have trouble filling up.

The same people that wanted Snyder to retire are the same people who want Wooldridge canned. Shut up.

TO THE EDITOR

Black History Month a time for reflection

Editor,

After last year's fiasco over some of the comments and lack of coverage about Black History and other minority groups, I hoped that this campus would not have a rerun of those issues. After reading the third, "Why isn't there a White History Month?" comment, I realize that although we are supposed to be an enlightened student body, we still have many ignorant and cowardly people among us who choose the disguise of the Fourum to make such comments.

To all those people who complain about black people getting a month for history, I have news for you: Black History Month is not for you. It is for us and anybody else who is willing to hear our stories and recognize our importance.

It is for people like my great-grandparents who spent their youth harvesting peanuts in segregated Georgia but sought to risk it all to move north and create something better for themselves and their descendants.

My "Nana," now 87 years old, has no idea what kinesiology is and could probably care less about K-State athletics or Willie the Wildcat, but she never fails to tell me how proud she is of me for "getting a learning."

Black History Month is not a period of time where we go around asking for sympathy in our tribulations and causes.

It is a rest stop on our collective journey to reflect and become inspired so that we can continue to forge the road that anyone who knows what it feels like to struggle and overcome, can follow.

Students should be wary of credit

Editor,

I want to applaud your efforts in pointing out the dangers of mismanaging credit in Wednesday's Collegian. I especially enjoyed the photo illustration of the man being overwhelmed by plastic; however, the card depicted is a debit card.

If students stick to using only a debit card for purchases they will never be overwhelmed by credit cards because the debit card requires the user to have a little thing called money.

Evidently the artists who designed the photo illustration today have sense enough to stay away from credit cards and only had a debit card handy to work with!

Logo shows pride, support

Editor,

I was shocked Monday when I read the article, "KSU logo no longer allowed in elections." John Fairman doesn't give us a reason why students will no longer be allowed to use the Powercat logo on election signs other than saying, "local, state, and national candidates are not allowed to use [it]."

Does Fairman really interpret student body elections as "local" elections? I personally believe that students running for student body positions are using the logo as a sign of pride and not as an endorsement. The licensing laws should be changed to allow us to use our logo in campus elections.

Fairman seems to be more worried about royalties than pride. I've seen the Powercat logo on student organization Web sites. Does that mean the University supports that club? What about student cars with painted logos or murals painted in our halls, dorms and greek houses?

We support our school to the tune of several thousand dollars a semester. I would argue that the logo belongs to the students. Without the students, there would be no logo; K-State would not exist. I would hope that our University fully supports its students running in school elections.

I think I speak for a majority of the student body when I say we take pride in our logo and don't look to profit from it, unlike our licensing department.

Let's make an exception to the licensing rules so that we are allowed to show our pride on campus.

TV shows portray unrealistic lesbian relationships

By Ailee Slater
OREGON DAILY EMERALD

When I'm considering whether to flip on a TV show, I'd like to think that I look for the basics: good plot, good characters, good writing, good lesbian love sequence.

Once they've run out of common drama (for example, long-lost children returning home as the illegitimate love slaves of their mother's bikini-waxer), TV networks sometimes add a peculiar dimension to their regularly scheduled programming – namely, two chicks getting it on. Sounds a bit vulgar and offensive, but maybe the whole concept of networks exploiting female sexuality for ratings is itself a bit vulgar and offensive.

I applaud the fact that human sexuality is culturally recognized, even if it is to show the orgasmic potential of Raisin Bran Crunch. Still, the sexual power of the male body is rarely recognized, while the sexual power of the female body is exploited beyond recognition.

A few weeks ago, Fox's "The OC" introduced a relationship between haughty-depressed-rich-girl Marissa and wrong-side-of-the-tracks-punk-girl Alex. Although both had been involved in heterosexual relationships, love began to blossom between the two right around February sweeps.

To Fox's credit, the show handles lesbianism as an issue or way of life in a pretty fantastic manner.

Marissa's best friend is supportive of the relationship with Alex; Marissa struggles with being openly homosexual, but is comforted by Alex, and the camera is blunt about their physical attraction for each other, but not tasteless.

With the media influencing so many people's opinions on the world around them, perhaps any positive representation of a minority group should be lauded and left at that.

However, television's brand of lesbianism usually lacks realistic images of sexuality. Most TV shows that introduce a woman-to-woman romance portray that relationship as a quick gay blip in lives that are truly heterosexual.

The romance between "The OC" women is a developing relationship rather than a flashy disappearing act, and both women are attractive, popular main characters. I guess happy lesbians aren't allowed to be unfeminine. Then again, according to the media, no unfeminine woman is truly granted happiness.

Yes, a public representation of lesbianism probably is and should be liberating to women whose sexuality is largely ignored by the world surrounding them.

The goal of the media is to make money, not a statement. Until that paradigm changes, positive yet realistic imagery of any kind will probably be hard to find for any gender or sexuality. In the meantime, we may as well admire the progress of seeing a positive representation of lesbianism and continue to strive for something even better.

Players back Wooldridge despite increased scrutiny

By Josh Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Jim Wooldridge was in no hurry to leave the Bramlage Coliseum floor Saturday.

After a post-game television interview, Wooldridge waved to fans sticking around after K-State's 73-53 win over Nebraska. Then, he went over to shake the hands of a line of supporters in the stands that stretched beyond the length of the floor.

His K-State men's basketball team had just picked up its third win in four games against a quality opponent on Senior Day, a game that boosted the Wildcats' chances of postseason play.

However, it hasn't been all smiles much of this season, as the win did not erase the uncertainty regarding the status of the five-year coach beyond this year.

Much has been made of Wooldridge's future with the Wildcats after the team went through a six-game losing streak earlier in the conference season.

Wooldridge said he wants his team to focus just day-to-day.

"I told our players before the game – and it's true after the game – that it's not about the past, it's not about the future: it's about today," Wooldridge said. "And for once, that's all it's about: today."

Fans clearly recognize what is on the line for Wooldridge, as several signs in support of the coach were held up in the student section on Saturday.

But what did the players think?

Their public comments about Wooldridge's situation were minimal until Saturday afternoon.

"Coach is a great guy, great coach," freshman point guard Clent Stewart said. "There's no doubt in my mind he'll be back. I like playing for him, and I want him back. That's my coach. He's the guy who recruited me here and the guy I want to play for. I'm definitely looking forward to playing for him for four years."

Sophomore guard Lance Harris, who has played well since starting for the final games of the Big 12 Conference season, echoed Stewart's sentiments.

"Everybody's behind Coach Wooldridge," Harris said. "I believe in him 100 percent, and I can say everybody else does."

Both Stewart and Harris said they were aware of the increased talk about Wooldridge's future with the team but that it wasn't a topic that dominated locker-room discussion.

As the Wildcats prepare for Thursday's first-round Big 12 Tournament game against Texas A&M, support for Wooldridge does not just come from players who are set to return next year.

Senior forward Jeremiah Massey, who Wooldridge has said is the best player he's coached, said even though he might be gone next season, the coach at K-State should stay.

"Coach Wooldridge is a great coach," Massey said. "If it was up to me, Coach Wooldridge stays, but it's not up to me."

TRACK AND FIELD

Wildcats add another to NCAA list

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

She wanted to make sure her senior season would continue, so she raced into the record books.

K-State middle-distance runner Lysaira Roman-Del Valle won the 800-meter run at the Iowa State Last Chance on Saturday, becoming the fifth Wildcat to automatically qualify for next weekend's NCAA Indoor Championships in Fayetteville, Ark.

"I was surprised by how well I raced," Roman-Del Valle said. "I really don't have words to describe the feeling, but I just want to thank God."

The San Lorenzo, Puerto Rico, native completed her last regular-season indoor race in a career-best time of 2 minutes, 4.43 seconds.

Her effort was good enough to set facility and meet records, and her time also broke K-State's oversized indoor-track record.

She said she was surprised when she heard her time.

"When I crossed the line, for some reason I thought I ran 2 minutes, 8 seconds," she said. "When they said I ran 2 minutes, 4 seconds, I thought, 'Thank you, God.' Coach told me (in practice), 'You are able to run 2 minutes and 4 seconds,' so I just went for it."

Roman-Del Valle owns the fourth-best time in the country for the 800, and she said she has hopes of winning the event at the national meet.

"My goal is to win," she said. "Every time I race, I just run to win, and I want to worship the Lord through running. I want to run as fast as I can for Him, and I want to make my university proud."

Head coach Cliff Rovelto said he was impressed by Roman-Del Valle's performance.

"Del Valle ran exceptionally well," Rovelto said. "That was the fastest she has ever run in her life, indoors or outdoors."

Heller led a Wildcat weight-throw sweep, as sophomore Shannon Popp (58-11 1/2) and freshman Megan Moser (58-11 1/4) finished second and third.

Heller, a redshirt freshman from Meriden, Kan., improved her NCAA provisional-qualifying status with her throw of 66-03, which ranks second in school history behind Renetta Seiler's toss of 69-02 1/2 at the 1998 NCAA Championships.

Heller said she was pleased with her performance, but she is uncertain whether her performance is good enough to qualify for the national meet.

"Going into the (Iowa State Last Chance), I knew I had to (set a personal best), so it was a big relief to get a better mark and help my shot for nationals," Heller said.

Heller is in a three-way tie with two other runners for 16th place in the nation, and will find out if she will be selected to compete in the national meet today.

Junior sprinter Rashaad Allen, freshman middle-distance runner Morgan Bonds and sophomore hurdler Lisi Maurer were among the other Wildcats who competed on Saturday.

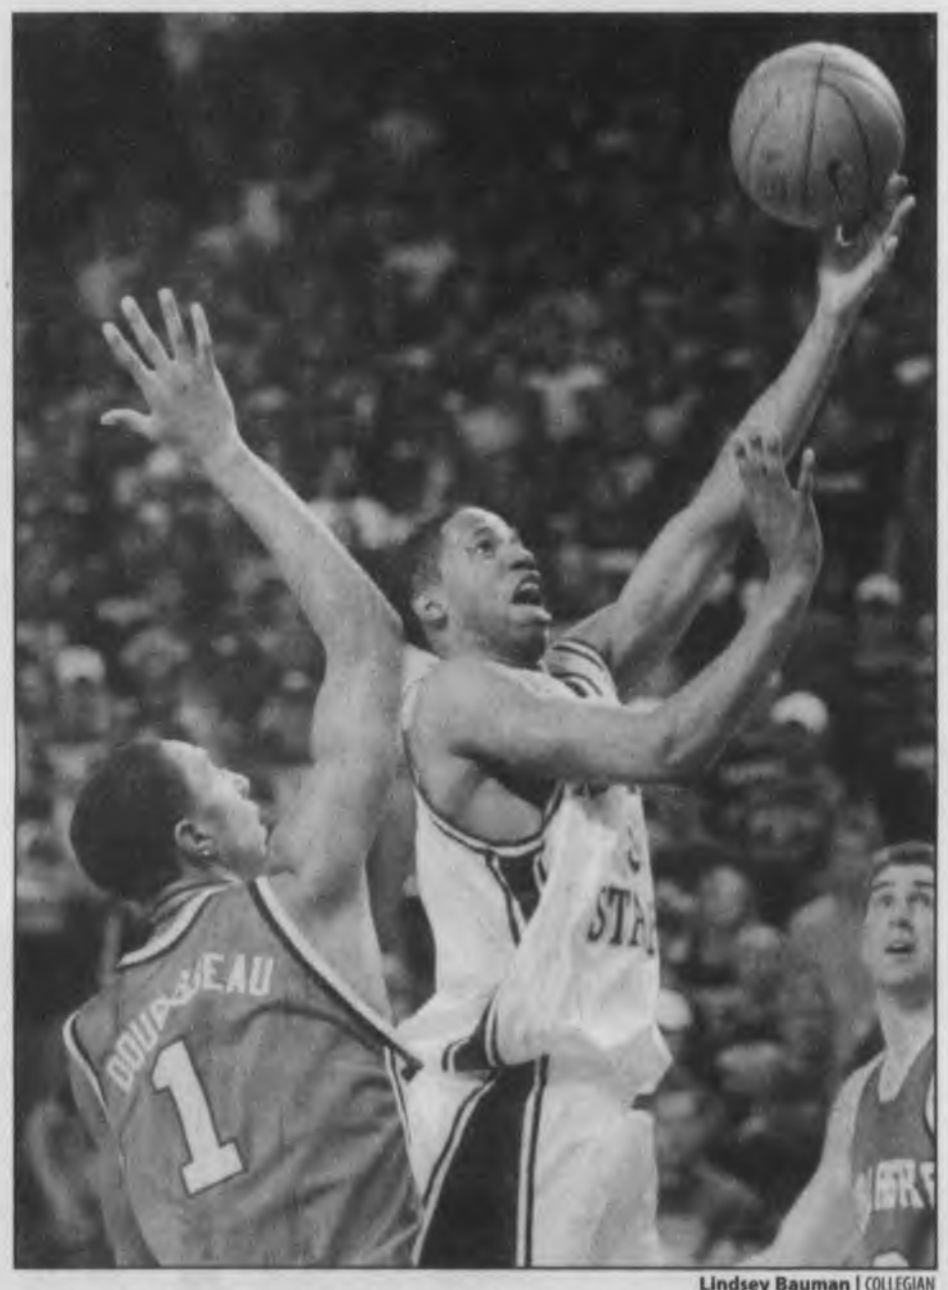
Holding leads and putting teams away in the second half has been a struggle.



K-State refused to let that happen Saturday against Nebraska in the season finale.

The Wildcats (16-11, 6-10) used a 25-5 run in the second half to defeat the Cornhuskers 73-53 at Bramlage Coliseum on a day when seniors Jeremiah Massey, Justin Williams and Travis Canby were honored.

"I really thought going into the game it was going to be barn-burner that was going down to the last possession," Coach Jim Wooldridge said. "I really believed that. It was great having a cushion going down the stretch."

Massey and Williams did not disappoint in their last home game. Massey scored 17 of his game-high 25 points in the second half and grabbed nine rebounds, while Williams had 12 points and nine boards.

"We were just concentrating on Jeremiah a lot," sophomore guard Lance Harris said. "He was getting a lot of touches, getting a lot of layups and then he was getting to the free-throw line, and that opened the guard play up."

Lindsey Bauman | COLLEGIAN
Wildcat guard Clent Stewart puts in a basket while being defended by Nebraska guard Jason Dourisseau during the second half of Saturday's game at Bramlage Coliseum. K-State won 73-53.

Harris added 18 points on 7-of-11 shooting in his fifth-straight start.

The win, coupled with Missouri's victory over Kansas Sunday, gave the Wildcats the No. 10 seed in this week's Big 12 Tournament. The Wildcats will play No. 7 seed Texas A&M (19-8, 8-8) at 6 p.m. Thursday at Kansas City's Kemper Arena.

K-State's postseason hopes also received a boost. Since the inception of the Big 12 only one team – Baylor in 1997 – failed to qualify at least for the National Invitational Tournament (NIT) with six conference wins and a winning record.

"It would mean a lot to Kansas State," Harris said of a postseason appearance. "It would be a new experience for everybody."

Keying Saturday's victory was defense.

Wooldridge used man-to-man and zone to shut down Nebraska (14-13, 7-9), as the Cornhuskers shot 43.5 percent from the floor and just 36 percent in the second half.

Massey, Williams shine in final game

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was their day to shine, and shine they did, as senior forwards Jeremiah Massey and Justin Williams played their final regular-season games at home Saturday.

In K-State's 73-53 win over Nebraska, Massey and Williams combined for 35 points and 18 rebounds to help give the Wildcats the No. 10 seed in the Big 12 Conference tournament.

Chris Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Despite their efforts, Massey and Williams had completely opposite games.

In the first half, Massey struggled, shooting 2-of-8 from the field for eight points and grabbing six rebounds, while Williams was perfect from the field, going 3-for-3 for eight points and pulling in three rebounds.

Coach Jim Wooldridge said Williams' play of late has been a boost for the team.

"He has really seized on his opportunity to play, and I think he has kept himself in check better," Wooldridge said. "He's played with a lot of energy, and he has really helped us these past two games."

In the second half, Massey came alive, scoring 17 points on 6-of-9 shooting and grabbing six rebounds. Williams scored only four points in the second half, but he pulled in six rebounds for the Wildcats.

Massey said it was an emotional day, but he didn't play emotionally in the first half.

"It felt great to have the crowd behind you for your last game," Massey said. "I couldn't get it going early, but I finished pretty strong, so I'm pretty happy."

With 25 points, Massey finished the regular season averaging 17.8 points per game and has scored in double figures in 18 consecutive games.

The 6-foot-7 Detroit native has also scored more than 20 points in three of his last four games.

"I'm scoring the ball a lot better, and I'm going to the boards like I used to last year, so everything I can do to try and help my team to win, I'll do," Massey said.

While these numbers have become the norm for Massey, Williams has arguably had the best two-game stretch of his career.

Against Kansas Wednesday, the 6-foot-10 Hamburg, Ark., native had 10 points on 5-of-6 shooting and six rebounds, and against Nebraska, Williams scored 12 points on 6-of-9 shooting, with nine rebounds.

"Justin played well inside, and I think he really played well against Kansas," freshman guard Clent Stewart said. "He was a beast inside and got some boards."

Williams said he is happy with his play, but wins are all that really matter to him.

"It means a lot, but my thing is and the whole team's thing is to just go out and try to get some wins," Williams said. "Whether it was Senior Day or whatever day, we were just hungry for some wins."

WBB | Wecker named Big 12 Player of the Year

A title she was predicted to earn before the season began held firm at the end, as K-State senior forward Kendra Wecker was named the Big 12 Player of the Year on Friday.

Wecker

Wecker, who was chosen as the league's Preseason Player of the Year, is the third straight Wildcat to hold the honor, as former teammate Nicole Ohlde won it the last two seasons.

Wecker, a native of Marysville, Kan., is averaging 21.0 points per game and 10.1 rebounds per game to lead the conference in both categories. She is just 13 points shy of becoming the league's all-time leading scorer.

WBB | Patterson finalist for Naismith Award for coaching

K-State women's basketball head coach Deb Patterson was named among the final 20 candidates for the Naismith Award, given annually to the top coach in Division 1, the Atlanta Tipoff Club announced Thursday.

Patterson

Patterson has amassed a 172-101 record in her nine seasons at K-State. In the last three seasons, she has led the Wildcats to three consecutive NCAA Tournament appearances and the program's first ever Big 12 Conference regular season title.

This season, Patterson has led K-State to a 21-6 overall record, their fourth straight 20-win season, and a No. 3 seed in the upcoming Big 12 Tournament.

WBB | Madden still full-time member of team

K-State head coach Deb Patterson said in a released statement Friday that senior forward Brie Madden was still a part of the team and would not be under any suspension heading into postseason play.

Madden

"Brie Madden is at full status with the team and is 100 percent ready to contribute to the opportunities that our team has before us in both the Big 12 and NCAA Tournaments," Patterson said.

Madden's status with the team had been the topic of speculation after she did not suit up for the Wildcats in the second half of K-State's 80-53 win over Missouri last Wednesday.

GOLF | K-State finishes 6th in weekend tournament

K-State's men's golf team carded a final-round 306 on Sunday to finish sixth at the Dick Wittcoff/USF Invitational in Tampa, Fla. The Wildcats finished with a total team score of 908, just five shots behind fifth-place Austin-Peay. Host Southern Florida won the event with a score of 888.

Junior Ben Kern tied for 12th to earn his fourth straight top-20 finish. Senior Nick Schumacher tied for 14th.

Juniors Tyler Cummins and Jonathan James finished 56th and 70th, respectively.

Freshman Kyle Yonke played as an individual and finished tied for 25th.

Ohio State reserve forward Matt Sylvester hit a 3-pointer with 5.1 seconds left on Sunday to hand the top-ranked Illini their first loss, 65-64.

Quest for jeans

Buying wardrobe staple simplified

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Finding the perfect pair of jeans may well be the fashion equivalent of the quest for the Holy Grail. No matter how long or exhaustively you have searched for them, you have gone home empty handed.

Knowing the types of jeans that are flattering to your body or taking the time to make a few simple measurements, however, can simplify your search and help you find a pair that fits and flatters your body type.

The first challenge in finding jeans is figuring out your size.

Guys have an advantage in this endeavor, as men's pants are categorized by two measurements: waist and inseam. Knowing these numbers before shopping can save lots of undesirable time in the fitting room.

Women's jeans are sized very differently than men's. Sizes are expressed by single numbers on the tag that hold little consistency between brands. A six at one store may very well be an eight at another.

Mollie Baldwin, assistant manager of American Eagle at Manhattan Town Center and senior in apparel and merchandising, said store associates are willing to help customers find the right size of jeans.

"We suggest that you try on several pairs, and we'll go from there," Baldwin said.

The second, and often more difficult, consideration in buying jeans is finding the right style for your body type.

Men's jeans are more flexible in this category, as they generally have a looser fit by design. The style is often just a matter of personal preference for most guys.

The right style of jeans can make a girl look taller and leaner, while the wrong style can have the opposite effect.

Sara Strothman, owner of Zotcis Attire on Moro Street, said pockets are one detail to consider in flattering your figure. Larger pockets will minimize your derriere, while smaller ones can maximize a slight figure.

She said that a good pair of jeans can make one look taller: longer jeans equal longer legs.

"A good fit should sit right on your hips, and will just graze the floor," Strothman said.

According to the Lucky Brand shopping manual, low-rise, gently flared jeans with a well-fitted rear are universally flattering. Baggy, tapered, or high-waisted jeans, on the other hand, are to be avoided at all costs.

Jeans are available at almost any clothing store and range from $20-200 in price. For sizes that are consistently difficult to find, www.target.com allows customers to custom order Mossimo jeans to fit their precise measurements.

Texas band releases long-delayed album; loyal fans not disappointed

"Worlds Apart"
Album review by Jessica Grant

In 1860, while researching pre-Hispanic step pyramids in the Yucatan Peninsula, Harvard linguistics professor Ethan Allan Vanderpool came across Mayan scrolls that pertain to a religious rite performed on the Eve of the Mayan New Year.

The ceremony to summon the spirit of the Mayan corn god Apuk begins with the lines, "Sever for us all ties between the now and what is to be/ We will act as your sword, oh Great Itzamna/ And you will know us by the trail of the dead."

More than 100 years later, the final line of the ceremony has been appropriated by a grandiose band from Texas.

It seems appropriate to note here that there is something about Texas that breeds a certain kind of hyperbolic persona in musicians. Texas has cultivated such notable and bizarre musicians as David Byrne, Janis Joplin and Meat Loaf.

Texas natives ...And You Will Know Us by the Trail of Dead recently released the long delayed album, "Worlds Apart," a piece that solidifies its standing as the most recent larger-than-life Texas export.

Fans of the band have been eagerly awaiting the newest release for ...Trail of Dead, after the success of their 2002 album "Source Tags and Codes."

"Worlds Apart" seems to be an attempt by ...Trail of Dead to combine the respective sounds they exhibited on their last two albums. The punk side perfected on 2000's "Madonna" meets the progressive noise rock of "Source Tags and Codes," for an epic sound complete with horns, strings and a tinkling piano.

Even the album art seems to play into the blended, yet somehow unconnected feels of ...Trail of Dead. On the cover, a monstrous medieval battle (the crusades?) is fought under a cascade of skulls. It seems as though ...Trail of Dead is making a statement about the societal dichotomies created by clashing religious values.

"Worlds Apart" begins with the track "Ode to Isis," which features a choir chanting the names of ancient Egyptian gods.

This dramatic intro, complete with the eerie sounds of what is possibly a re-creation of an ancient army marching to battle, leads into what promises to be a truly rockin' album.

The following track, "Will You Smile Again," is magnificent. Throbbing drums meet controlled guitar rock for probably the best piece on the album.

After this piece, the album falls off a bit. None of the songs are "bad" per se, it is just that many of the songs sound too similar to be truly notable, which is the biggest downfall of the album.

Loyal fans will probably not be disappointed in "Worlds Apart," an album that some will probably describe as an "epic achievement."

'The Pacifier' tops weekend box office

Vin Diesel's family-friendly comedy "The Pacifier" pulled in $30.2 million on its opening weekend to rank as the nation's top-grossing movie, turning his action-star image and box-office expectations upside down.

Diesel

Proving he's more than biceps and tattoos, Diesel's performance as a Navy-SEAL-turned-baby-sitter easily outdistanced the weekend's other major opening — "Be Cool", with John Travolta.

"Be Cool", the sequel to the 1995 comedy "Get Shorty", took in $23.5 million, making it the largest weekend opening for Travolta, according to studio estimates.

Surrogate stands in for Leno for Jackson jokes

Jay Leno says he can still write the Michael Jackson jokes, he just can't tell them.

So while the "Tonight Show" host waits to hear whether he is exempt from a gag order barring potential witnesses from discussing Jackson's child molestation trial, Leno called on actor Brad Garrett to act as his Jackson joke-telling surrogate.

"As I'm sure you know, I was called as a witness in the Michael Jackson trial," Leno told his audience Friday night. "I'm going to tell the jury the same thing I'm telling you right now. I only rode that llama once. I didn't know it was underage.

"I'm not allowed to tell any Michael Jackson jokes. I can still write them," Leno added before handing the reins to Garrett.

Sony Corp. names 1st non-Japanese chair

Sony Corp. on Monday appointed Howard Stringer as chairman — an executive who oversees its entertainment business — the first time a foreigner has been named to lead a major Japanese electronics maker and symbolizing the electronics' giant's determination to make change.

Stringer, vice chairman at Sony and chief executive of Sony Corp. of America, replaces Nobuyuki Idei, who has led the Tokyo-based company for a decade.

The shake up comes as fears grow about Sony's ability to revive its core electronics operations, battered by cheaper competition from Asian rivals.

The decision was made at a board meeting and was subject to shareholders' approval in June, Sony said in a statement.

Help available for apartment-seekers

City officials enforce housing codes, can take landlords to court

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

College students living in apartment buildings may not know that if they find their apartment does not meet codes, they can easily do something about it.

Brad Claussen, building official for the city of Manhattan, said the city does not make annual rounds to check the buildings.

"Right now, we do it on a complaint basis.

"If someone calls us with a problem in their apartments, that's typically how we inspect them now," Claussen said.

Claussen said the most common broken codes include basement apartments not having appropriate fire exits and problems with smoke detectors.

The codes are updated every three years.

Claussen said if an apartment building is found to be habitually breaking codes, they can be taken to court and fined $100 to $500.

The fine is determined by the municipal court judge.

The city of Manhattan also has the power to order the building to be vacated.

Michael Moore, property manager at University Commons apartments, said they check their apartments thoroughly before the tenants move in.

"Once a tenant moves out, we have a little over two weeks where there's no one living in that apartment.

"And in that two week time period, we go over everything so when the new tenants move in, the apartments look to be brand new," Moore said.

Moore said the easiest way to report a code violation in one of his buildings is to call the front desk, and they will try to fix it within 24 to 48 hours.

"Of course, if a part has to be ordered, it may take a little longer," he said.

Julie Wareham, freshman in pre-nursing, lives in Mont Bleu Apartments.

One of the first things to think about when renting is money, she said.

Another suggestion Wareham had for others finding an apartment is to ask someone who has lived there before.

Wareham said although the apartment building was older it still met the standards.

"It has been kept up nice. There were no holes in the walls or dead bugs on the floor," Wareham said.

Sarah Barr, student attorney for the Office of Student Activities and Services, said a key factor when looking for an apartment is to look at the actual apartment.

"Look at the property, not the model, but the one that you are physically going to occupy," Barr said.

Barr said looking over the contract and getting some history on the apartment would also be helpful to prospective renters.

"Make sure the dates of the contract are understandable. Go to KP&L and get a utility history.

"Unless the landlord pays utilities, each apartment needs a separate gas meter. Do some research on the landlord.

Talk to current tenants and check the contract about late fees.

Also, check for a clause about renewal dates," she said.

Barr cautions students to be extra aware when signing a housing contract.

"What students don't understand is once you put your name on the line, they are playing with the big boys.

"It is a legally binding contract.

"You sign the contract, you are living there for a year.

"Often times, students don't understand they are legally responsible for that apartment," she said.

Barr's advice was to make sure that you can deal with the living arrangement when you sign the contract.

"The best thing to do when going in is make sure that you can live with these three other people and assorted guinea pigs for a year," she said.

Governor proposes health care reforms

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius has proposed $50 million in health care reforms to address rising medical costs across the state.

The proposals, which will reach the Kansas Legislature soon, focus on providing health care education programs and better medical care to Kansans, while driving down costs in the health care industry.

Funding for these reforms would come from an increased tax on the sale of cigarettes and other tobacco products.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said streamlining the health care system would decrease the amount of money spent on paperwork. Currently, 30 percent of Kansas health care costs are administrative.

"Implementing health awareness programs would help people learn to take better care of themselves and utilize health care effectively," Carlin said.

This knowledge could eliminate practices that increase expenses for health care and insurance providers, such as visiting the emergency room for minor medical problems.

The proposed reforms would also focus on the needs of 250,000 Kansans who are currently uninsured. Insurance coverage would be extended to an additional 40,000 children and 50,000 low income working parents throughout the state. New insurance options would also be made more affordable to assist small businesses in providing health benefits.

"Implementing heath awareness programs would help people to learn to take better care of themselves and utilize health care effectively."

Rep. Sydney Carlin
D-Manhattan

Lannie Zweimiller, Lafene Health Center director, said the governor's reforms would be good for K-State students.

"Students would have better access to health care services and insurance, not just at Lafene, but any health care service," Zweimiller said.

Wildcats beat Texas Tech 5-2

Team holds longest streak since 2003

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team started Big 12 play with a win on Saturday over Texas Tech. The team got off to a rough start in doubles play, but came back to win the match, 5-2.

Senior Maria Rosenberg won her 74th career singles match and is now just three victories away from the K-State career record.

K-State lost the doubles point for just the second time this season.

Texas Tech's duo of Ogden Diaz and Janet Durham swept the Wildcats' team of junior Jessica Simcox and senior Judith Diaz.

The defeat was the first of the season for the Wildcats doubles partners.

The Wildcats bounced right back as Rosenberg and freshmen Tamar Kvaratskhelia and Fernanda Da Valle won in three straight sets. Kvaratskhelia beat Durham of Texas Tech to improve her overall record to 20-4.

Da Valle won in a tiebreaker over Lakarin Wagley. Da Valle is currently riding a three match winning streak.

K-State took a 3-1 advantage on Rosenberg's victory over Diaz. The match then turned in the Wildcats' favor when freshmen Tereza Pruchankova beat Katja Kovacic, marking the third consecutive victory for Pruchankova.

The Wildcats' final point of the day came from Simcox.

Simcox's victory over Tara Browning gave K-State its fifth point of the day. Simcox's fourth straight singles victory.

The current winning streak of three is the longest for K-State since the 2003 season when K-State won six in a row. K-State is also now above the .500 mark for the first time since February 2004.

The Wildcats won't be playing at home again until April 17. K-State's next action will be next weekend when the Wildcats play Oklahoma State on Saturday and Oklahoma on Sunday.

Cats set school records with weekend sweep

By Nathan Ryerson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team set numerous school records, including the most runs in a series, with a record setting weekend sweep over the St. Francis Terriers.

K-State (7-5) capped off its record setting weekend with a 10-4 victory over the Terriers (0-3) on Sunday, giving K-State a combined 61 runs in the series.

The Wildcats also tied single game school records for runs and hits with 30 runs and 26 hits. They set new school records in doubles (10) and largest margin of victory (26).

The offensive barrage was ignited after St. Francis took a 3-0 lead in the second inning off K-State junior Adam Cowart (3-0).

K-State answered with eight runs in the bottom of the second inning to take the lead. K-State scored 22 more runs, including a 10-run seventh.

The game was called by the coaches in the middle of the eighth inning.

"You've got to be doing things right to score 30 runs on somebody," Coach Brad Hill said.

The offensive effort included 10 Wildcats collecting two or more hits on the day, with juniors Joe Roundy and Steve Murphy and sophomore Eli Bunder each collecting four. Bunder finished the day 4-for-5 with four RBI, four runs and his first career homer, while Murphy was 4-for-7 with five RBI and his second homer of the weekend.

"Eli gave us some momentum today," Hill said. "He got us kick started early."

Cowart earned his third straight win after giving up three earned runs on four hits while walking none and striking out five.

Shortstop Eli Bunder completes the double play during the third game of the series against St. Francis Sunday afternoon. The Wildcats dominated the weekend series, winning 17-1, 14-1 and 10-4.

Chris Hanewinckel
COLLEGIAN

On Saturday, K-State's offense piled on the runs in a 14-1 victory over the Terriers.

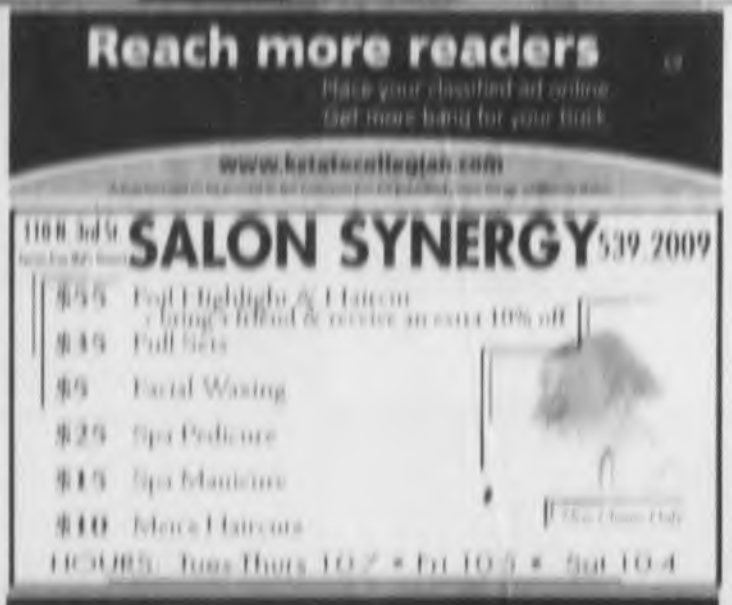
The Wildcats jumped out to an 8-0 lead after three innings.

The game was highlighted by sophomore Jared Goedert's three run home run and a Murphy grand slam.

"We are putting up a good amount of runs," Murphy said. "We still need to work on the little things."

Junior Chase Mitchell (2-0) got the win, as he held St. Francis scoreless through five innings. He did not surrender a hit, struck out six and walked four.

"I felt good out on the mound today," Mitchell said of his performance on Saturday. "Games like (Saturday's) help everybody on the team."



K-State started off the weekend on Friday with a 17-1 win over the Terriers.

Response time at 8 minutes

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Response times for fire departments are vital to saving lives.

Pat Collins, emergency management director for Riley County, said the department's average response time was eight minutes for 374 calls last year.

When comparing Kansas to other states, times can vary.

"In more urban areas the stations are closer, and we try to cover everything within a five-mile circle of the stations," he said. "About 4 to 5 percent of the population in Riley is outside the five mile protecting area."

The department oversees 608 square miles and has 16 stations in Riley County. Collins said most of the budget is spent on apparatus and other equipment.

In other departments, almost 92 percent of the budget is paying personnel. About 75 percent of its budget is equipment and training. There are two positions and 163 volunteer firefighters.

There are 90 people employed. That number includes shift administrative positions.

Jerry Snyder, operations chief for the Manhattan Fire Department, said they also have student firefighters.
